PREFACE

The object of this book is to give in one volume the Statute and Case Law relating to Companies, and also such Company Forms and Precedents as are likely to be of service in ordinary practice. I have found it necessary to include the Assurance Companies Act, 1909.

The cases decided in the Hilary Term, 1912, and the more important of those decided in the Easter Term, 1912, have been incorporated in the text. Among the latter will be found the decision of the Court of Appeal in the Birkbeck Permanent Benefit Building Society case, and that of the Divisional Court in Galloway v. Schill Seebohm & Co., a case relating to the particulars required in the summary to be filed under section 26 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. Another recent case of considerable importance is the General Motor Cab case, decided by the Court of Appeal on April 1st, 1912. There is as yet no full report of this case, which deals with the powers, conferred by section 120 of the Act, and I have therefore had recourse to the petition and a transcript of the shorthand note taken of the judgments.

For convenience of reference, forms have, throughout the book, been placed immediately after the part of the text dealing with the subject-matter to which they relate—and references to the forms will also be found in the text. The Appendix to the book contains the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and all rules, orders, and regulations made under or kept on foot by that Act, and now in force, including the Limited Partnerships (Winding-up) Rules, 1909, and Order XLIa. of the County Court Rules. The Stock Exchange Rules and Regulations relating to official quotations and special settlements are also in the Appendix. The subject is, of course, primarily dealt with from a lawyer's point of view, but I have also endeavoured to deal fully with any questions which appeared to me likely to be of interest to accountants, secretaries, and other persons concerned with the practical working of companies. I have devoted special attention to ensuring that all statements with regard to practice of every sort embody the existing practice, and so far as possible all orders inserted are orders of very recent date.

While I am alone responsible for everything that appears in this book, I have sought to obtain expert assistance and advice as to the practice that prevails in the various courts and departments which are concerned with companies. Mr. Thomas Barnes, of the Companies (Winding-up) Department, has read through both the MSS. and the proofs of all parts of this work which deal in any way with his department (that is to say, from p. 557 to the end). Thanks to his invaluable advice and assistance, I feel that whatever other failings the book may have, it does give an accurate account of the practice and procedure in the Companies (Winding-up) Court. I have also received considerable assistance from the other officials in the Companies (Winding-up) Department, and perhaps I might specially mention Mr. J. R. Bull. I was anxious to make the forms of memorandum and articles, debentures, and debenture trust deeds suitable for an official quotation on the Stock Exchange, and in this I have been helped by the secretary of the Share and Loan Department of the Stock Exchange, Mr. J. A. Torrens-Johnson, who has most kindly read through such forms, and given me information on points arising out of the rules and practice of the Stock Exchange. The Committee of the Stock Exchange have allowed me to publish in the Appendix to this book the extracts from their rules and regulations which I have already mentioned. The Comptroller of the Companies Department of the Board of Trade, Mr. Heron Maxwell, has given me permission to publish certain forms and regulations; and Mr. H. A. Payne, of the Board of Trade, and the Assistant-Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, Mr. G. J. Sargent, have given me information on various points of practice in their respective departments. I take this opportunity of tendering to all these gentlemen my most hearty thanks for the assistance they have given me.

ARTHUR STIEBEL.

COMPANY LAW AND PRECEDENTS

INTRODUCTORY.

THE Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, consolidates into one Act the provisions contained in the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1908—and consequently practically the whole of the Statute law relating to limited companies is contained in it—the mass of case law which had grown up round the earlier Acts, is, however, practically left untouched, and very little attempt has been made to incorporate it into the Act.

The Consolidation Act (a) repeals all the Acts cited as "the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1908" (b) and also the Companies Seals Act, 1864; sections 25, 26, and 34 of the Stannaries Act, 1869; the Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870; section 56 of the Conveyancing (Scotland) Act, 1874; section 10 of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1875, so far as it relates to the winding-up of companies; subsection (1) of section 28 of the Supreme Court of Judicature (Ireland) Act, 1877, so far as it relates to the winding-up of companies; sections 9, 10, 13 (2), and 31 of the Stannaries Act, 1887; section 3 of the Trustees Savings Banks Act, 1887; sections 1, 2, and 3 of the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Act, 1888, so far as they relate to companies; section 18 of the Revenue Act, 1889; section 4 of the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy (Ireland) Act, 1889, so far as it relates to companies; the Directors Liability Act, 1890; the Preferential Payments in Bankruptcy Amendment Act, 1897; and subsection 4 of section 6 of the Limited Partnerships Act, 1907. The Act leaves on foot the powers of a company to alter its memorandum of association under section 3 of the Mortgage Debentures Act, 1865 (c), and does not repeal or affect the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870 to 1872 (d), or section 3 of the Trade Union Act, 1871 (e), except that references in them to the Companies Act, 1862, or the Companies Act, 1862 and 1867, are to be read as references to the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

(b) I.e. The Companies Acts, 1862, 1867, 1877, 1879, 1880, 1883 (Colonial Registers), 1886, 1890 (Memorandum of Association), 1890 (Winding-up), 1893 (Winding-up), 1898, 1900, 1907, and 1908.

With regard to the repealed Acts and provisions the repeal does not affect

(a) The incorporation of any company registered under any enactment repealed; nor

(b) Table B. in the schedule annexed to the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856, or any part thereof so far as the same applies to any company existing at the commencement of the Act; nor

(c) Table A. in the first schedule annexed to the Companies Act, 1862, or any part thereof, either as originally contained in that schedule or as altered in pursuance of Section 71 of that Act, so far as the same applies to any company existing at the commencement of the Act.

(d) The continuance in force of section 47 of an Act to regulate Joint Stock Banks in England (7 & 8 Vict. c. 113) and the part of section 12 of the Joint Stock Banking Companies Act, 1857, which is set out in the second part of the Sixth Schedule to the Act (f).

These last two provisions were kept in force by section 205 of the Companies Act, 1862, and are as follows:—

"Every company of more than six persons established on the sixth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and forty-four, for the purpose of carrying on the trade or business of bankers within the distance of sixty-five miles from London, and not within the provisions of the Act passed in the session of the seventh and eighth years of Queen Victoria, chapter one hundred and thirteen, intituled 'An Act to regulate Joint Stock Banks in England,' shall have the same powers and privileges of suing and being sued in the name of any one of the public officers of such co-partnership as the nominal plaintiff, petitioner, or defendant on behalf of such co-partnership; and all judgments, decrees, and orders made and obtained in any such suit may be enforced in like manner as is provided with respect to such companies carrying on the said trade or business at any place in England exceeding the distance of sixty-five miles from London under the provisions of the Country Bankers Act, 1826, provided that such first-mentioned company shall make out and deliver from

(c) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 292.

(d) Ibid., s. 293. These Acts have, however, now been repealed and re-enacted (with material alterations) by the Assurance Companies Act, 1909.

(e) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 294.

time to time to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue the several accounts or returns required by the last-mentioned Act, and all the provisions of the last-recited Act as to such accounts or returns shall be taken to apply to the accounts or returns so made out and delivered by such first-mentioned companies as if they had been originally included in the provisions of the last-recited Act (g)."

Notwithstanding anything contained in any Act passed in the session holden in the seventh and eighth years of Queen Victoria, chapter one hundred and thirteen, and intituled "An Act to Regulate Joint Stock Banks in England," or in any other Act, it shall be lawful for any number of persons not exceeding ten, to carry on in partnership the business of banking, in the same manner and upon the same conditions in all respects as any company of not more than six persons could before the passing of the Joint Stock Banking Companies Act, 1857, have carried on such business (h).

The mention of these particular matters in section 286 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, does not as the section expressly states prejudice the general application of section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, with regard to the effect of repeals (i).

The Act also provides (k) that—

Every conveyance, mortgage, or other deed, made before the commencement of the Act in pursuance of any enactment thereby repealed, is to be of the same force as if the Act had not passed, and for the purposes of that deed the repealed enactment is to be deemed to remain in full force (l), and that where any enactment repealed by the Act is mentioned or referred to in any document that document is to be read as if the corresponding provision (if any) of the Act were therein mentioned or referred to and substituted for the repealed enactment (m).

With regard to the application of the Act to existing companies (n)

(g) 7 & 8 Vict. c. 113, s. 47.

(h) Joint Stock Banking Companies Act, 1857, s. 12 (the part which is not repealed).

(i) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 286 (2). This section preserves existing rights and liabilities.

(k) As to liquidations which had commenced before the Act came into force, see post, p. 779, note (b).

(n) By the definition section of the Act (s. 285), the expression "existing company" means a company formed and registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts or under the Companies Act, 1862, and the expression "Joint Stock Companies Acts" means the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856; the Joint Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857; the Joint Stock Banking Companies Act, 1857; and the Act to enable Joint Stock Banking Companies to be formed on the principle of limited liability, or any one or more of those Acts, as the case may require; but does not include the Act passed in the eighth year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, chapter one hundred and ten, intituled An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint Stock Companies.

it applies in the same manner in the case of a limited company other than a company limited by guarantee as if the company had been formed and registered under the Act as a company limited by shares ; in the case of a company limited by guarantee, as if the company had been formed and registered under the Act as a company limited by guarantee ; and in the case of a company other than a limited company, as if the company had been formed and registered under the Act as an unlimited company ; but any reference express or implied, to the date of registration must be construed as a reference to the date at which the company was registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts, or under the Companies Act, 1862, as the case may be (o).

The Act applies to every company registered but not formed under the Joint Stock Companies Acts, or the Companies Act, 1862, in the same manner as it applies to companies registered but not formed under the Act (p) ; but any reference, expressed or implied, to the date of registration must be construed as a reference to the date at which the company was registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts or the Companies Act, 1862, as the case may be (q) ; it applies to every unlimited company registered, in pursuance of the Companies Act, 1879, as a limited company, in the same manner as it applies to an unlimited company registered in pursuance of the Act as a limited company ; but any reference, expressed or implied, to the date of registration must be construed as a reference to the date at which the company was registered as a limited company under the Companies Act, 1879 (r).

A company registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts may cause its shares to be transferred in manner hitherto in use, or in such other manner as the company may direct (s).

No company, association, or partnership (t) consisting of more than ten persons may be formed, for the purpose of carrying on the business of banking (u), unless it is registered as a company under (o) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 245. It will be seen that companies registered under the Joint Stock Companies Act can now (as they could under the Act of 1862) register under this Act. A company registered under the Act of 1862 cannot register under this Act.

(p) See post, pp. 23 et seq., as to this.

(t) In Smith v. Anderson (1880), 15 C. D. 247, JAMES, L.J., treats the words "association" and "company" as being synonymous. The word "partnership" would apply to a body of persons, which cannot change its members or introduce new members without the consent of all the partners.

(u) In District Savings Bank (1861), 3 De G. F. & J. 335; 31 L. J. Bank 8, a Savings Bank was, owing to the nature of its business, held not to carry on a banking business.

the Act, or is formed in pursuance of some other Act of Parliament, or of Letters Patent; and no company, association, or partnership consisting of more than twenty persons may be formed, for the purpose of carrying on any other business that has for its object the acquisition of gain by the company, association, or partnership, or by the individual members thereof, unless it is registered as a company under the Act or is formed in pursuance of some other Act of Parliament or of Letters Patent, or is a company engaged in working mines within the Stannaries and subject to the jurisdiction of the court exercising the Stannaries jurisdiction (x). This section in substance reproduces section 4 of the Act of 1862. An old common law partnership will not be within the prohibition of the section even if it has changed some, or probably all, its members after the Acts came into force (y).

The word "business" in the section is wider than the word "trade," and will consequently include farming (z); but the fact that land or other property is bought for the purpose of being distributed among or held for the benefit of the purchasers will not amount to a business being carried on, for the carrying on of a business implies a series of transactions (a), and even if the purchasers have under the document which regulates their rights and duties, ancillary powers, e.g. powers of sale and reinvestment, which if they stood alone and were the main object of the association, would constitute the carrying on of a business—this will not bring the association within the section (b); it will be otherwise where such powers are not ancillary but are some of the main objects of the association—so where land which was purchased was to be distributed, but the mines were to be reserved and worked, it was held that a mining business was to be carried on (c).

If a business is being carried on by trustees for more than twenty persons, then as trustees are in no sense agents of their cestuis qui trustent, the business will not be carried on by more than twenty persons, always assuming there are not more than twenty trustees, and the case will not be within the prohibition of the section (d). In such case the beneficiaries will often be entire strangers to one another, and so for that reason will be outside the section as not constituting a company association or partnership.

The business need not necessarily be one under which it is contemplated that the company, association or partnership is to acquire gain; it will be enough if the individual members are to do so (e), and so mutual insurance companies (f), and mutual money-lending societies will be within the section (g). An association becomes illegal as soon as it grows beyond twenty members (h). The section contains an exception in favour of companies formed in pursuance of some other Act of Parliament. In one case (i) Wright, J., held that a society formed under an Act (k) which was subsequently repealed, became illegal on the repeal of such Act. A Scotch court has taken the opposite view (l). The decision of Wright, J., was admittedly taken without full consideration, as there was another point which was sufficient to decide the case, and quite apart from the provisions of section 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889, his decision involves reading the words "formed in pursuance of some other Act of Parliament" as "formed and existing in pursuance of some other Act of Parliament"—and it is therefore submitted that the Scotch case was correctly decided. Societies registered under the Friendly Societies Acts are within this exception to the section (m). Trades unions cannot register under the Act (n). It has been held that a trade union, which had succeeded in registering under the Companies Act, 1862 to 1898, must be treated as an unregistered society, and that, as it had more than twenty members, it could not sue for fines due under its rules (o).

(e) Bear v. Bromley (1852), 18 Q. B. 271, and Reg. v. Whitmarsh (1850), 15 Q. B. 600, were decided under the earlier Acts, and the words about individual members, were inserted to do away with the law laid down in these cases.

(n) The Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 5, provides that the registration of a trade union under this Act shall be void. An association which has objects which standing alone would make it a trade union, will not be a trade union if it has also other objects, Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, [1909] 1 Ch. 163; affirmed [1910] A. A society which is illegal under this section cannot sue (p) or be sued (q) for debts due to it or from it, in carrying on its business; it cannot be wound up under the Act (r); it cannot nor can its members come to the court to have the trusts under which its property is held administered (s); and it cannot have costs awarded to it (t). Its members are, however, beneficially interested in its funds, so that they can obtain a conviction against any person who has embezzled them (u), and they can recover so much of their contributions as have not been spent (x).

Foreign corporations, even though they have more than twenty members, are not within the section (y).

Any seven or more persons, or, where the company to be formed will be a private company (z) within the meaning of the Act, any two or more persons associated, for any lawful purpose may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association and otherwise complying with the requirements of the Act in respect of registration, form an incorporated company with or without limited liability (that is to say), either—

See s. 294 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, which provides that nothing in that Act is to affect the provisions of s. 5 of the Trade Union Act, 1871. The Companies (Converted Societies) Act, 1910, would appear to make the certificate of the Registrar conclusive in all cases, and it may, therefore, be doubted if these decisions are good law.

The reasoning in these cases seems to apply where the petitioner had no notice of the Society's illegality. The first case in this note shows that if an order has been made to wind up such a society the remedy is by way of appeal, and the second that the illegality of the society cannot be set up as a defence in proceedings in the winding-up after the winding-up order.

(z) The provisions of the Act as to private companies do not seem to lend themselves to a case of a company which has not got a share capital.

(i) A company having the liability of its members limited by the memorandum to the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares respectively held by them (i.e. a company limited by shares); or

(ii) A company having the liability of its members limited by the memorandum to such amount as the members may respectively thereby undertake to contribute to the assets of the company in the event if its being wound up (i.e. a company limited by guarantee); or

(iii) A company not having any limit on the liability of its members (i.e. an unlimited company) (a).

The memorandum must bear the same stamp as a deed, and must be signed by each subscriber in the presence of at least one witness, and that attestation will be sufficient in Scotland as well as in England and Ireland (b).

There may in the case of a company limited by shares, and there must in the case of a company limited by guarantee or unlimited, be registered with the memorandum, articles of association signed by the subscribers to the memorandum and prescribing regulations for the company.

Articles of association may adopt all or any of the regulations contained in Table A in the First Schedule to this Act (c).

In the case of an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee, the articles, if the company has a share capital, must state the amount of share capital with which the company proposes to be registered.

In the case of an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee, if the company has not a share capital, the articles must state the number of members with which the company proposes to be registered, for the purpose of enabling the Registrar to determine the fees payable on registration (d).

(c) The forms in the first schedule to the Act may be altered by the Board of Trade, but not so as to ncrease the amount of fees payable to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies: any such Table or Form when altered must be published in the London Gazette, and will thenceforth have the same force as if included in one of the schedules to the Act, but no alteration in Table A in the First Schedule will affect any company registered before the alteration, or repeal as regards that company any portion of that Table. Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 118: there have now been three Table A's. See as to this, post, pp. 86 and 87.

the commencement of the Act, if articles are not registered, or, if articles are registered, in so far as the articles do not exclude or modify the regulations in Table A in the First Schedule to the Act, those regulations will, so far as applicable, be the regulations of the company in the same manner and to the same extent as if they were contained in duly registered articles (e).

To come within the provisions of the Act relating to private companies, a company must by its articles—

(a) Restrict the right to transfer its shares (f) ; and

(b) limit the number of its members (exclusive of persons who are in the employment of the company) to fifty ; and

(c) prohibit any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company (g).

A private company may, subject to anything contained in the memorandum or articles of association of the company, by passing a special resolution and by filing with the Registrar such a statement in lieu of prospectus as the company, if a public company, would have had to file before allotting any of its shares or debentures, together with such a statutory declaration as the company, if a public company, would have had to file before commencing business, turn itself into a public company. It is thought, and this is also the view taken by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, that a company which apart from the fact of its being a private company would be entitled to carry on business (e.g. a company originally formed as a public company, before the 1st of July, 1908), need not file a statement in lieu of a prospectus or a statutory declaration (h).

Joint holders of shares are for the purposes of the section treated as a single member (h).

ciation must bear the same stamp as a deed, and be signed by each signatory to the memorandum in the presence of one witness. See as to this and as to the form of and alterations to articles, ibid., ss. 12 and 13, and post, p. 86 et seq.

(e) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 11.

(f) The Registrar of Joint Stock Companies takes the view that this must apply to all the shares of a company.

(g) In addition, the Registrar insists on the articles not containing provisions as to share warrants, see post, p. 87, note (m), and p. 310. A company continues to be a private company while it has these provisions in its articles, even though it wholly disregards them (e.g. by having 250 members): Park v. Royalties Syndicate, [1912] 1 Ch. 330.

(h) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 121. The provisions as to altering private companies into public companies are difficult to understand. Is it enough to have a resolution altering the articles in the matters which distinguish a private company from a public company, or must the resolution expressly state that the company is to become a public company? It is thought that the latter form of resolution will be unnecessary, though no doubt desirable.

The advantages, in addition to requiring two signatories only to the memorandum, enjoyed by a private company are—

(1) They are not required to include in the summary to be filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies under section 26, a statement in the form of a balance sheet.

(2) They need not under section 65 forward or file a statutory report.

(3) The provisions of section 72 restricting the appointment and advertisement of first directors and requiring a list of persons who have consented to be directors to be delivered to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies when registration is applied for, do not apply to private companies.

(4) They need not file with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies the statement in lieu of a prospectus required by section 82 of the Act.

(5) The minimum subscription section (section 85) does not apply to them.

(6) They need not obtain a certificate entitling them to commence business (see section 87), and if a private company turns itself into a public company, such a certificate is not necessary, and, indeed, is wholly inapplicable (i).

(7) The rights of inspection and receiving copies of balance sheets conferred by section 114 on preference shareholders and debenture holders do not apply.

Of course, too, the prohibition against carrying on business contained in section 115 only applies where there are less than two (not less than seven) members. The Registrar of Joint Stock Companies is not concerned, when registering a company which has seven signatories to its memorandum, and which complies with section 72 of the Act, with the question whether it is a private company or not. The question may, however, arise if he seeks to enforce penalties for not making returns required of a public company. The memorandum and articles (if any) must in the case of all companies registered under the Act be delivered to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies for that part of the United Kingdom in which the registered office of the company is stated by the memorandum to be situate and he must retain and register them (k); but where the registration of a company involves, either because of the name of the company or otherwise, a fraud, the Court will not grant a mandamus to the registrar of Joint Stock Companies, ordering him to register. Thus no mandamus was granted where the registrar declined to register a company with the word "dentist" as part of its name, because that implied that the company was, what it was not and could not be, registered under the Dentists Act, 1878 (l). Except in the case of a private company, an applicant for registration of the memorandum and articles of a company must on application deliver to the Registrar a list of the persons who have consented to be directors of the company, and if this list contains the name of any person who has not so consented, the applicant will be liable to a fine not exceeding £50 (m).

(i) On special request such a certificate is sometimes issued.

(k) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 15: as to the fees payable on registration, see post, pp. 43 et seq. In addition to such fees, there is an ad valorem stamp duty of 5*s.* for every £100 and fraction of £100 of the amount of the nominal capital of a limited company, and a statement of the amount which is to form the capital of such a company must be delivered to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies: 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39, s. 12; 62 & 63 Vict. c. 9, s. 7.

A statutory declaration by a solicitor of the High Court and in Scotland by an enrolled law agent engaged in the formation of the company, or by a person named in the articles as a director or secretary of the company of compliance with all or any of the requirements of the Act in respect of registration and of matters precedent or incidental thereto, must be produced to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and he may accept such a declaration as sufficient evidence of compliance (n).

It has been suggested that a company which has no intention whatever of carrying on business here, but intends to carry on and manage its business entirely abroad, is not entitled to register under the Act (o) in the case under discussion, the articles contained provisions which were invalid according to English law—and the question was whether a winding-up order should be made—and such order was made, the company being treated as a fraudulent one. In spite of the great eminence of the judges who made these remarks, it is submitted that it is perfectly competent for such companies to register here, and this view has been taken in two later cases (p).

The fact that all the signatories are nominees of one person will not disentitle them to registration (q).

company (r) the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies must certify under his hand that the company is incorporated and in the case of a limited company that the company is limited (s) a certificate of incorporation given by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies in respect of any association will be conclusive evidence that all the requirements of the Act in respect of registration and of matters precedent and incidental thereto have been complied with and that the association is a company authorised to be registered and duly registered under the Act (t).

It was held under section 18 of the Act of 1862, that if the Memorandum of Association had only been signed by six signatories (u), the certificate of the registrar was not conclusive, and the company was not duly incorporated; to alter the law so laid down, a section corresponding to the present one was included in the Act of 1900 (x); this section would also seem to do away with cases like Northumberland and Durham District Banking Co. (y), where it was said that if the company which was not an existing banking company, so as to be capable of registration, had been registered, the court could go behind the registrar's certificate.

It has been held that a trade union if in fact registered can be treated as an unincorporated body (z), because section 5 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, says that the registration of a trade union under the Companies Acts is void—it is thought that these cases cannot be supported since the Companies (Converted Societies) Act, 1910—notwithstanding the fact that the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, expressly provides (a) that nothing therein contained is to affect the provisions of section 5 of the Trade Union Act, 1871—and that in all cases the certificate of the registrar will now be conclusive for all purposes (b). Even before section 18 of the Act of 1862 was altered it was held that it was impossible to go behind the Registrar's certificate where one or more of the signatories were infants (c), or even where the memorandum was altered after having been signed (c)—and consequently, it would seem, there were no signatories at all (d).

The fact that the certificate has been obtained by fraud will not make it the less conclusive (e).

From the date of incorporation mentioned in the certificate of incorporation the subscribers of the memorandum together with such persons as may from time to time become members of the company, will be a body corporate by the name contained in the memorandum, capable forthwith of exercising all the functions of an incorporated company, and having perpetual succession and a common seal, with power to hold lands, but with such liability on the part of the members to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up as is mentioned in the Act (f).

The power of holding land is however subject to the exception that a company formed for the purpose of promoting art, science, religion, charity, or any other like object, not involving the acquisition of gain by the company or by its individual members, may not, without the licence of the Board of Trade, hold more than two acres of land; but the Board may by licence empower any such company to hold lands in such quantity, and subject to such conditions, as the Board think fit (g). Applications under this section should be made by letter from the secretary or solicitor of the company to the Board, and the letter should give the reasons why it is desired to hold the additional land. The practice of the Board is to give a licence to hold rather more land than is immediately required, on the company giving a letter undertaking to furnish particulars of all land held, if and when required by the Board so to do; but the Board of Trade will, if desired, give a licence to hold a particular piece of land.

In McGlade v. The Royal London Mutual Insurance Society, [1910] 2 Ch. 169, the Court of Appeal seems to have thought it might have been possible to challenge the incorporation of a Friendly Society as a company on the ground of the resolution authorising such incorporation being ultra vires. The power of holding land does not extend to foreign corporations, which will be subject to the provisions of the Mortmain Acts—but it has been extended to companies incorporated in a British possession, which have filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies the documents specified in paragraphs (a), (b), and (c) of section 274 (h) of the Act—such companies have the same power of holding land as if they were incorporated under the Act (i).

Section 72 (3) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, provides that :—

"This section shall not apply to a private company nor to a prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company after the expiration of one year from the date at which the company is entitled to commence business."

Turning to the special requirements of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909.

This Act does not affect the National Debt Commissioners or the Postmaster-General, acting under the authorities vested in them respectively by the Government Annuities Acts, 1829 to 1888, and the Post Office Savings Bank Acts, 1861 to 1908 ; it also does not apply to a member of Lloyd's or of any other association of underwriters approved by the Board of Trade, who carries on assurance business of any class, provided that he complies with the requirements set forth in the Eighth Schedule to the Act, and applicable to business of that class (n).

Save as otherwise expressly provided by the Act nothing in the Act applies to assurance business of any class other than one of the classes specified in section one of the Act, and a policy is not to be deemed to be a policy of fire insurance by reason only that loss by fire is one of the various risks covered by the policy (o).

Section 1 of the Act provides that—this Act shall apply to all persons or bodies of persons, whether corporate or unincorporate, not being registered under the Acts relating to friendly societies or to trade unions (p) (which persons and bodies of persons are hereinafter referred to as assurance companies), whether established before or after the commencement of this Act, and whether established within or without the United Kingdom, who carry on within the United Kingdom assurance business of all or any of the following classes :—

(a) Life assurance business ; that is to say, the issue of, or the undertaking of liability under, policies of assurance upon human life or the granting of annuities upon human life (q).

(n) These provisions are thought to be beyond the scope of this work, and are therefore omitted.

(o) Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 28.

(p) The Board of Trade may, on the application of any unregistered trade union originally established more than twenty years before the commencement of this Act, extend to the trade union the exemption conferred by the Act on registered trade unions, and may on the application of an unregistered friendly society extend to the society the exemption conferred by this Act on registered friendly societies if it appears to the Board, after consulting the Chief Registrar of Friendly Societies, that the society is one to which it is inexpedient that the provisions of the Act should apply, ibid., s. 35.

(q) The expression "annuities on human life" does not include superannuation allowances and annuities payable out of any fund applicable solely to the relief and maintenance of persons engaged or who have been engaged in any particular profession, trade, or employment, or of the dependants of such persons, ibid., s. 29.

In respect of this class of business—

"Policy on human life" means any instrument by which the payment of money is assured on death (except death by accident only), or the happening of any contingency dependent on human life, or any instrument evidencing a contract which is subject to payment of premiums for a term dependent on human life; and where the company grants annuities upon human life "policy" includes the instrument evidencing the contract to pay such an annuity, and "policy holder" includes annuitant; (r).

A scheme by which women who have purchased goods for a certain number of weeks prior to their husbands' deaths get an annuity during widowhood, is within these provisions (rr).

(b) Fire insurance business; that is to say, the issue of, or the undertaking of liability under, policies of insurance against loss by or incidental to fire; (s)

(c) Accident insurance business; that is to say, the issue of or the undertaking of liability under, policies (t) of insurance upon the happening of personal accidents, whether fatal or not, disease, or sickness, or any class of personal accidents, disease, or sickness; (s)

(d) Employers' liability insurance business; that is to say, the issue of, or the undertaking of liability under, policies (t) insuring employers against liability to pay compensation or damages to workmen in their employment; (s)

Where a company carries on employers' liability insurance business the Act does not apply in respect to that business in the cases following:—

(1) Where the company is an association of employers which satisfies the Board of Trade that it is carrying on or is about to carry on business wholly or mainly for the purpose of the mutual insurance of its members against liability to pay compensation or damages to workmen employed by them, either alone or in conjunction with insurance against any other risk incident to their trade or industry; or

(2) Where the company carries on the employers' liability insurance business as incidental only to the business of marine insurance by issuing marine policies or policies in the form of marine policies covering liability to pay compensation or damages to workmen as well as losses incident to marine adventure or adventure analogous thereto; (u)

(s) Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 1.

(t) In relation to accident insurance business and employers liability insurance business the expression policy includes any policy under which there is for the time being an existing liability or under which any liability may accrue: Assurance Companies Act, 1909, ss. 32 and 33.

(u) Ibid., s. 33 (1) (a) and (b)

(e) Bond investment business; (w) that is to say, the business of issuing bond or endowment certificates by which the company, in return for subscriptions payable at periodical intervals of two months or less, contract to pay the bond holder a sum at a future date, and not being life assurance business as above defined (x).

A company registered under the Companies Acts which transacts assurance business of any of these five classes in any part of the world is to be deemed to be carrying on such business within the United Kingdom (x).

Subject to the exceptions after mentioned—

Every assurance company must deposit and keep deposited with the Paymaster-General for and on behalf of the Supreme Court the sum of twenty thousand pounds.

The sum so deposited must be invested by the Paymaster-General in such of the securities usually accepted by the Court for the investment of funds placed under its administration as the company may select, and the interest accruing due on any such securities will be paid to the company.

The deposit may be made by the subscribers of the memorandum of association of the company, or any of them, in the name of the proposed company, and, upon the incorporation of the company, will be deemed to have been made by, and to be part of the assets of, the company, and the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, may not issue a certificate of incorporation of the company until the deposit has been made.

Where a company carries on, or intends to carry on, assurance business of more than one class, a separate sum of twenty thousand pounds must, subject to the exceptions after mentioned, be deposited and kept deposited under this section as respects each class of business, and the deposit made in respect of any class of business in respect of which a separate assurance fund is required to be kept will be deemed to form part of that fund, and all interest accruing due on any such deposit or the securities in which it is for the time being invested must be carried by the company to that fund.

The Paymaster-General may not accept a deposit except on a warrant of the Board of Trade.

The Board of Trade may make rules with respect to applications for warrants, the payment of deposits, and the investment thereof or dealing therewith, the deposit of stocks or other securities in lieu of money, the payment of the interest or dividends from time to time accruing due on any securities in which deposits are for the time being invested, and the withdrawal and transfer of deposits (y), and the rules so made will have effect as if they were enacted in this Act, and must be laid before Parliament as soon as may be after they are made.

This section applies to an assurance company registered or having its head office in Ireland, subject to the following modifications:—

References to the Supreme Court are to be construed as references to (w) In the cases of these companies the expression "policy" includes any bond, certificate, receipt, or other instrument evidencing the contract with the company: Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 34 (a).

(x) Ibid., s. 1.

(y) Rules have, as is mentioned later, been made, but the question of withdrawing and transferring deposits is reserved for the chapter on petitions (infra, p. 772 et seq.).

the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland, and references to the Paymaster-General are to be construed as references to the Accountant-General of the last-mentioned Court (z).

In the case of life assurance companies the obligation to deposit and keep deposited the sum of £20,000 applies notwithstanding that the company has previously made and withdrawn its deposit or been exempted from making its deposit under any Act repealed by the Assurance Companies Act, 1909 (a). Where a company incorporated before 1870 was unable to make a deposit, a receiver was appointed, on a motion to get in and collect a fund which had been set aside to meet policies and the income thereof and all premiums and other moneys in respect of outstanding policies of the company (b).

Any business carried on by an assurance company which under the provisions of any special Act relating to that company is to be treated as life assurance business is to continue to be so treated, and is not to be deemed to be other business or a separate class of assurance business within the meaning of the Act (c).

With regard to companies carrying on fire insurance business, accident insurance business, and bond investment business—

Such of the provisions of the Act as relate to deposits do not apply with respect to any such business carried on by a company, if such company has commenced to carry on that business in the United Kingdom before the third day of December nineteen hundred and nine (d).

With regard to companies carrying on employers' liability insurance business—

Such of the provisions of the Act as relate to deposits to be made under the Act do not apply with respect to the employers' liability insurance business carried on by a company where the company had commenced to carry on that business within the United Kingdom (f) before the twenty-eighth day of August nineteen hundred and seven (f). Employers' liability insurance business carried on outside the United Kingdom is not to be treated as part of the employers' liability insurance business of the company for the purposes of the Act (g).

(z) Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 2. The deposit is like the fund to be set aside under s. 3 of this Act, infra, pp. 21 and 22, the security of the policy-holders or of the particular class of policy-holders for whom it is deposited, Nelson & Co. (1906), 22 T. L. R. 406.

(a) Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 30 (c). The Acts repealed by this Act are the Life Assurance Companies Acts, 1870, 1871, and 1872; the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876; and the Employers Liability Insurance Companies Act, 1907.

(f) Ibid., s. 33 (d).

(g) Ibid., s. 33 (i).

With regard to fire and accident insurance business—

It is not necessary to make a deposit in respect of fire insurance business where the company has made a deposit in respect of any other class of assurance business, and where a company, having made a deposit in respect of fire or accident insurance business, commences to carry on life assurance business or employers' liability insurance business, the company may transfer the deposit so made to the account of that other business, and after such transfer the deposit will be treated as if it had been made in respect of such other business (h);

With regard to fire insurance business—

Such of the provisions of the Act as relate to deposits to be made under the Act do not apply where the company is an association of owners or occupiers of buildings or other property which satisfies the Board of Trade that it is carrying on or is about to carry on business wholly or mainly for the purpose of the mutual insurance of its members against damage by or incidental to fire caused to the houses or other property owned or occupied by them (i).

The Board of Trade has made the following rules under the Assurance Companies Act, 1909:—

Where any company (k) is required, in pursuance of the Act, to deposit the sum of twenty thousand pounds with the Paymaster-General for the time being for and on behalf of the Court, the company, or the subscribers of the memorandum of association of the company or any of them, as the case may be (in this Rule referred to as the depositors), may, in the name of the company, make application to the Board of Trade for a warrant, and the Board of Trade may thereupon issue their warrant to the depositors for lodgment of such deposit in Court (l), which warrant shall be a sufficient authority for the company or persons therein named to lodge the money therein mentioned at the bank (m) to the account of the Paymaster-General (n) for and on behalf of the Court, and for the Paymaster

(h) Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 31 (d) and s. 32 (c).

(i) Ibid., s. 31 (c).

(k) "Company" means a company to which the Act applies, and includes an Irish company as next herein-after defined.

"Irish Company" means a company to which the Act applies, and which is registered or has its head office in Ireland. Order of the Board of Trade 6th June, 1910. Rules relating to deposits by assurance companies under s. 2 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, R. 1.

(l) "The Court" means the Supreme Court of Judicature in England or in the case of an Irish Company the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland: ibid.

(m) "The Bank" means the Bank of England (Law Courts' Branch), or in the case of an Irish Company the Bank of Ireland, or in either case such Bank or branch of a Bank as may from time to time be appointed to receive and deal with cash and securities under the control of the Paymaster-General on behalf of the Court: ibid.

(n) "The Paymaster-General" means the Paymaster-General for the time being or in the case of an Irish Company the Accountant-General for the time being of the Supreme Court of Judicature in Ireland: ibid.

General, or the Assistant Paymaster-General (o) to issue directions to the Bank to receive the same, to be placed in the books of the Paymaster-General, to the credit of ex parte the company mentioned in such warrant, according to the method for the time being in force respecting the lodgment of money.

Provided, that in lieu, wholly or in part, of the lodgment of money, the depositors may bring into Court as a deposit an equivalent sum of any stocks, funds, or securities in which cash under the control of or subject to the order of the Court may for the time being be invested (the value thereof being taken at a price as near as may be to, but not exceeding, the current market price); and in that case the Board of Trade shall vary their warrant accordingly, by directing the lodgment of such amount of such stocks, funds, or securities, by the company or the persons therein named, to the said account of the said Paymaster-General for the credit in his books of ex parte the Company mentioned in such warrant (p).

Where the assurance business by reason whereof the deposit is made is a class of business in respect of which a separate assurance fund is required to be kept (that is to say, is either life assurance business, employers' liability insurance business or bond investment business), then and in any such case the application to the Board of Trade and the warrant of the Board of Trade shall specify the particular class of business in respect of which the deposit is being made, and the deposit shall be marked accordingly in the books of the Paymaster-General to a special ledger credit. In all other respects the provisions of the last preceding Rule shall apply to any such separate deposit (q).

Where a lodgment of money or securities has been made under the preceding Rules, the Court may, on the application of the Company order—

(a) Investment in such of the stocks, funds, or securities in which cash under the control of or subject to the order of the Court may for the time being be invested as the applicants desire and the Court thinks fit, and either by way of original investment or by way of variation of investment.

(b) Payment to the Company of the interest, dividends, or income from time to time accruing due on any stocks, funds, or securities in which the deposit is for the time being invested.

(c) Transfer or payment in the cases provided for by the Rules following of the deposit and the stocks, funds, or securities for the time being representing the same either from one ledger credit of the Company to another or out of Court (r).

In the case of a company transacting other business besides that of assurance or transacting more than one class of assurance business—

(o) "The Assistant Paymaster-General" means the official or one of the officials acting for the time being as the Assistant or Deputy of the Paymaster-General as hereinbefore defined in relation to business connected with the Court: Order of Board of Trade of 6th June, 1910, Rules relating to deposits by Assurance Companies under s. 2 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909.

(r) Ibid., R. 4.

A separate account must be kept of all receipts in respect of the assurance business or of each class of assurance business, and the receipts in respect of the assurance business or, in the case of a company carrying on more than one class of assurance business, of each class of business, must be carried to and form a separate assurance fund with an appropriate name; the investments of any such fund are not required to be kept separate from the investments of other funds.

A fund of any particular class is as absolutely the security of the policy holders of that class as though it belonged to a company carrying on no other business than assurance business of that class, and will not be liable for any contracts of the company for which it would not have been liable had the business of the company been only that of assurance of that class, and may not be applied, directly or indirectly, for any purposes other than those of the class of business to which the fund is applicable (s).

These provisions do not however apply to companies carrying on fire or accident insurance business so far as such businesses are concerned (t), and in the case of life assurance business there are the exceptions following—

(1) Nothing in the Act providing that the life assurance fund shall not be liable for any contracts for which it would not have been liable had the business of the company been only that of life assurance is to affect the liability of that fund, in the case of a company established before the ninth day of August eighteen hundred and seventy, for contracts entered into by the company before that date;

(2) In the case of a company carrying on life assurance business and established before the ninth day of August eighteen hundred and seventy, by the terms of whose deed of settlement the whole of the profits of all the business carried on by the company are paid exclusively to the life policy holders, and on the face of whose life policies the liability of the life assurance fund in respect of the other business distinctly appears, such of the provisions of the Act as require the separation of funds, and exempt the life assurance fund from liability for contracts to which it would not have been liable had the business of the company been only that of life assurance, do not apply (u);

Deposits made under the Life Assurance Companies Acts, 1870 to 1872, or the Employers Liability Insurance Companies Act, 1907, and the deposit funds representing the same are primâ facie, and, in default of reason to the contrary, to be treated and dealt with as having been made in respect of the life assurance business or as the case may be, the employers liability insurance business of the companies by or on behalf of which such deposits were made (x).

(s) Assurance Companies Act, 909, s. 3. In Nelson & Co., [1905] 1 Ch. 551, BUCKLEY, J., declined to sanction a scheme for reduction of contracts, on the ground that as the company's business was carried on it could not comply with these provisions; and see British Widows Assurance Co., [1905] 1 Ch. 40, for a scheme sanctioned by the Court.

The issuing in any case of any Warrant or certificate relating to a deposit or to the deposit fund, or any error in any such Warrant or certificate, or in relation thereto, will not make the Board of Trade, or the person signing the Warrant or certificate on their behalf, in any manner liable for or in respect of the deposit fund, or the interest or dividends accruing on the same, or any part thereof, respectively (y).

Any assurance company which makes default in complying with any of the requirements of this Act will be liable to a penalty not exceeding one hundred pounds, or, in the case of a continuing default, to a penalty not exceeding fifty pounds for every day during which the default continues, and every director, manager, or secretary, or other officer or agent of the company who is knowingly a party to the default will be liable to a like penalty; and, if default continue for a period of three months after notice of default by the Board of Trade (which notice must be published in one or more newspapers as the Board of Trade may, upon the application of one or more policy holders or shareholders, direct), the default will be a ground on which the Court may order the winding up of the company, in accordance with the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (z).

If any account, balance sheet, abstract, statement, or other document required by this Act is false in any particular to the knowledge of any person who signs it, that person will be guilty of a misdemeanour and will be liable on conviction on indictment to fine and imprisonment, or on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds (a).

Every penalty imposed by this Act may be recovered and applied in the same manner as penalties imposed by the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, are recoverable and applicable (b).

Part VII. of the Companies (Consolidation) Act authorises certain companies to register under the Act, and contains the following provisions:—

With the exceptions and subject to the provisions mentioned and contained in the section, and hereafter mentioned—

(i) any company consisting of seven or more members, which was in existence on the second day of November eighteen hundred and sixty-two (which was the date of the commencement of the Companies Act, 1862), including any company registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts (c); and (x) Order of the Board of Trade of 6th June, 1909. Rules relating to deposits by assurance companies under s. 2 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, R. 10.

(a) Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 24; Perjury Act, 1911, s. 5.

(b) Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 25.

(c) The Joint Stock Companies Acts are defined by s. 285 of the Act as meaning the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856; the Joint Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857; the Joint Stock Banking Companies

(ii) any company formed after that date, whether before or after the commencement of the Act, in pursuance of any Act of Parliament other than the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, or of letters patent, or being a company within the stannaries, or being otherwise duly constituted by law (d), and consisting of seven or more members; may at any time register under the Act as an unlimited company, or as a company limited by shares, or as a company limited by guarantee; and the registration will not be invalid by reason that it has taken place with a view to the company being wound up.

The exceptions and provisions above referred to are as follows—

(a) A company having the liability of its members limited by Act of Parliament or letters patent, and not being a joint stock company as defined by section 250 of the Act may not register in pursuance of these provisions.

(b) A company having the liability of its members limited by Act of Parliament or letters patent may not register in pursuance of this section as an unlimited company or as a company limited by guarantee:

(c) A company that is not a joint stock company as defined by section 250 of the Act may not register under these provisions as a company limited by shares:

(d) A company may not register in pursuance of these provisions without the assent (e) of a majority of such of its members as are present in person or by proxy (in cases where proxies are allowed by the regulations of the company) at a general meeting summoned for the purpose:

Act, 1857, and the Act to enable Joint Stock Banking Companies to be formed on the principle of limited liability, or any one or more of those Acts, as the case may require, but does not include 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, intituled an Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint Stock Companies. Such companies are existing companies within the meaning of the same section, and the Act applies to them even apart from registration under it; see Part VI. of the Act, ss. 245 et seq. Application for a certificate of incorporation must in the case of a company desiring to be registered under Part VII. of the Act be on Form 17 or 18 supplied by Somerset House. Each of such forms must be signed by a director, secretary, or other authorised officer of the company. Form 17 applies where limited liability is desired. Form 18 in other cases. Each of such forms costs 2*d*.

(d) A partnership consisting of seven or more members is not a company "otherwise duly constituted by law" so as to be capable of registration under this section. Reg. v. Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, [1891] 2 Q. B. 598; Cussons, Ltd. (1904), 73 L. J. Ch. 296.

(e) Such assent must be shown by a copy of the resolution written or printed on Form 22 supplied by Somerset House (cost 2*d*.). The resolution may be written or printed on the third page of the form, and must be signed at the end by an authorised officer of the company.

(e) Where a company not having the liability of its members limited by Act of Parliament or letters patent is about to register as a limited company, the majority required to assent must consist of not less than three-fourths of the members present in person or by proxy at the meeting :

(f) Where a company is about to register as a company limited by guarantee, the assent to its being so registered must be accompanied by a resolution (f) declaring that each member undertakes to contribute to the assets of the company, in the event of its being wound up while he is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted before he ceased to be a member, and of the costs and expenses of winding-up, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves, such amount as may be required, not exceeding a specified amount (g).

In computing any majority under these provisions when a poll is demanded regard will be had to the number of votes to which each member is entitled, according to the articles of the company (g). In other cases the majority will of course be ascertained by a show of hands (h).

A company registered under the Companies Act, 1862, cannot register under these provisions (g); and a foreign corporation can likewise not avail itself of them (i). Societies registered under the Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (k), or the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893 (l), may by special resolution register themselves as companies under the Act. Without prejudice to the powers conferred by the Friendly Societies Act, 1896, the committee of management or other governing body of a collecting society having more than one hundred thousand members may petition the Court for an order for the conversion of the society into a mutual company under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. The Court must be satisfied on a poll being taken that 55 per cent. of the members over sixteen years of age agree to the conversion, and may settle a memorandum and articles of association for the company (ll).

(f) This resolution must be presented for filing with the Registrar on Form 22 supplied by Somerset House (cost 2*d*.). The resolution may be either printed or written on the third page of such form, and should be signed at the end by an authorised officer of the company.

(ll) Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 36.

The definition of a Joint Stock Company contained in section 250 of the Act, and above referred to is as follows:

"For the purposes of this part of this Act, as far as relates to registration of companies as companies limited by shares, a joint stock company means a company having a permanent paid-up or nominal share capital of fixed amount divided into shares, also of fixed amount, or held and transferable as stock, or divided and held partly in one way and partly in the other, and formed on the principle of having for its members the holders of those shares or that stock, and no other persons; and such a company when registered with limited liability under this Act shall be deemed to be a company limited by shares (m)."

Before the registration in pursuance of this Part of the Act of a joint stock company there must be delivered to the registrar the following documents (that is to say)—

(1) A list showing the names, addresses, and occupations of all persons who on a day named in the list, not being more than six clear days before the day of registration, were members of the company, with the addition of the shares or stock held by them respectively, distinguishing, in cases where the shares are numbered, each share by its number (n):

(2) A copy of any Act of Parliament, royal charter, letters patent, deed of settlement, contract of co-partnery, cost book regulations, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company; and

(3) If the company is intended to be registered as a limited company, a statement specifying the following particulars (that is to say):—

(a) The nominal capital of the company and the number of shares into which it is divided, or the amount of stock of which it consists;

(b) The number of shares taken and the amount paid on each share;

(c) The name of the company, with the addition of the word "limited" as the last word thereof (o); and

(d) In the case of a company intended to be registered as a company limited by guarantee, the resolution declaring the amount of the guarantee (p).

(m) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 250.

(n) This Form (No. 19) is supplied by Somerset House (cost 2*d*.). A 5*s*. registration fee stamp must be impressed. It must be signed by a director, secretary, or other authorised officer. Form 20 also supplied by Somerset House should be applied for at the same time. It is a continuation of Form 19.

(o) The preceding particulars will be presented for filing on Form 21, supplied by Somerset House (cost 2*d*.). Such statement must be signed by a director, secretary, or other authorised officer of the company.

(p) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 252.

Before the registration in pursuance of this Part of this Act of any company not being a joint stock company, there must be delivered to the registrar of joint stock companies—

(1) A list showing the names, addresses, and occupations of the directors or other managers (if any) of the company; and

(2) A copy of any Act of Parliament, letters patent, deed of settlement, contract of co-partnery, cost book regulations, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company; and

(3) In the case of a company intended to be registered as a company limited by guarantee a copy of the resolution declaring the amount of the guarantee (q).

The lists of members and directors and any other particulars relating to the company required to be delivered to the registrar must be verified by a statutory declaration of any two or more directors or other principal officers of the company (r), and in addition the registrar may require such evidence as he thinks necessary for the purpose of satisfying himself whether any company proposing to be registered is or is not a joint stock company as within the meaning of section 250 of the Act (s).

Where a banking company which was in existence on the seventh day of August, eighteen hundred and sixty-two proposes to register as a limited company, it must at least thirty days before so registering, give notice of its intention so to register to every person who has a banking account with the company, either by delivery of the notice to him, or by posting it to him at, or delivering it at, his last known address.

If the company omits to give the notice required by this section, then as between the company and the person for the time being interested in the account in respect of which the notice ought to have been given, and so far as respects the account down to the time at which notice is given, but not further or otherwise, the certificate of registration with limited liability will have no operation (t).

No fees are chargeable in respect of the registration in pursuance of this Part of this Act of a company if it is not registered as a limited company, or if before its registration as a limited company the liability of the shareholders was limited by some Act of Parliament or by letters patent (u).

When a company registers in pursuance of this Part of the Act with limited liability, the word "limited" will form and be registered as part of its name (x).

On compliance with the requirements of this Part of the Act with respect to registration, and on payment of such fees, if any, as are payable under Table B in the First Schedule to the Act, the registrar of joint stock companies must certify under his hand that the company applying for registration is incorporated as a company under the Act, and in the case of a limited company, that it is limited (y), and thereupon the company will be incorporated, and will have perpetual succession, and a common seal, with power to hold lands; and any banking company in Scotland so incorporated will be deemed to be a bank incorporated, constituted, or established by or under Act of Parliament (z).

All property, real or personal (including things in action), belonging to or vested in a company at the date of its registration in pursuance of this part of the Act, will on registration pass to and vest in the company as incorporated under the Act for all the estate and interest of the company therein (a).

Registration of a company in pursuance of this Part of the Act will not affect the rights or liabilities of the company in respect of any debt or obligation incurred, or any contract entered into, by, to, with or on behalf of the company before registration (b).

All actions and other legal proceedings which at the time of the registration of a company in pursuance of this Part of the Act are pending by or against the company, or the public officer or any member thereof, may be continued in the same manner as if the registration had not taken place; but execution may not issue against the effects of any individual member of the company on any judgment, decree or order obtained in any such action or proceeding; but, in the event of the property and effects of the company being insufficient to satisfy the judgment, decree, or order, an order may be obtained for winding-up the company (c).

(y) As to the conclusiveness of the certificate, see s. 17 of the Act, supra, p. 12.

(a) Ibid., s. 260, in Cussons, Ltd. (1904), 73 L. J. Ch. 296, where a partnership consisting of more than seven members had succeeded in getting itself registered under this part of the Act, it was held that though the company so formed ought never to have been registered, the certificate of the registrar was conclusive as the company being well formed, but that the property of the partnership did not pass to the company under this section. In the circumstances of the case the company has got a title under the Real Property Limitation Acts, 1833 and 1874.

(c) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 262. This section does not render persons who were members before the company was registered liable as contributories: Lanyon v. Smith (1863), 3 B. & S. 938; Harvey v. Clough (1863), 2 N. R. 204; Lofthouse's Case (1858), 2 De G. and J. 69; Sheffield and Hallamshire, &c., Society (1865), 4 De G. J. and S. 699. It was otherwise under the Act of 1856: Ex parte Stevenson (1863), 32 L. J. Ch. 96.

When a company is registered in pursuance of this Part of the Act—

(i) All provisions contained in any Act of Parliament deed of settlement, contract of co-partnery, cost book regulations, letters patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company, including, in the case of a company registered as a company limited by guarantee, the resolution declaring the amount of the guarantee, will be deemed to be conditions and regulations of the company in the same manner and with the same incidents as if so much thereof as would, if the company had been formed under this Act, have been required to be inserted in the memorandum, were contained in a registered memorandum, and the residue thereof were contained in registered articles :

(ii) All the provisions of the Act will apply to the company, and the members, contributories, and creditors thereof, in the same manner in all respects as if it had been formed under the Act, subject as follows (that is to say) :—

(a) The regulations in Table A in the First Schedule to the Act will not apply unless adopted by special resolution :

(b) The provisions of the Act relating to the numbering of shares will not apply to any joint stock company whose shares are not numbered :

(c) Subject to the provisions of this section (d) the company will not have the power to alter any provision contained in any Act of Parliament relating to the company ;

(d) Subject to the provisions of this section (d) the company will not have power, without the sanction of the Board of Trade, to alter any provision contained in any letters patent relating to the company ;

(e) The company will not have power to alter any provision contained in a royal charter or letters patent with respect to the objects of the company ;

(f) In the event of the company being wound up, every person will be a contributory, in respect of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted before registration, who is liable to pay or contribute to the payment of any debt or liability of the company contracted before the registration, or to pay or contribute to the payment of any sum for the adjustment of the rights of the members among themselves in respect of any such debt or liability; or to pay or contribute to the payment of the costs and expenses of winding-up the company, so far as relates to such debts or liabilities; and every contributory will be liable to contribute to the assets of the company, in the course of the winding up, all sums due from him in respect of any such liability; and in the event of the death or bankruptcy of any contributory or the marriage of any female contributory, the provisions of the Act with respect to the personal representatives, heirs, and devisees of deceased contributories, to the trustees of bankrupt or insolvent contributories, and to the liabilities of husbands and wives respectively will apply:

The provisions of the Act with respect to—

(a) The registration of an unlimited company as limited;

(b) The powers of an unlimited company on registration as a limited company to increase the nominal amount of its capital and to provide that a portion of its capital shall not be capable of being called up except in the event of winding up (e):

(c) The power of a limited company to determine that a portion of its share capital shall not be capable of being called up except in the event of a winding-up (e):

will apply, notwithstanding any provisions contained in any Act of Parliament, royal charter, deed of settlement, contract of co-partnery, cost book regulations, letters patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company.

The section does not authorize a company to alter any such provisions contained in any deed of settlement, contract of co-partnery, cost book regulations, letters patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company as would, if the company had originally been formed under the Act, have been required to be contained in the memorandum, and are not authorised to be altered by the Act: and the Act does not derogate from any power of altering its constitution or regulations which may by virtue of any Act of Parliament, deed of settlement, contract of co-partnery, letters patent, or other instrument constituting or regulating the company, be vested in the company (f).

(e) As to this, see ss. 58 and 59 of the Act, and post, p. 50 and p. 257.

(f) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 263. As to substituting a memorandum and articles of association for a deed of settlement, see post, p. 693.

Every company incorporated outside the United Kingdom which establishes a place of business (g) within the United Kindgom must within one month from the establishment of the place of business, file with the registrar of joint stock companies—

(a) A certified (h) copy of the charter, statutes, or memorandum and articles of the company, or other instrument constituting or defining the constitution of the company, and if the instrument is not written in the English language, a certified (h) translation thereof;

(b) A list of the directors (i) of the company;

(c) The names and addresses of some one or more persons resident in the United Kingdom authorised to accept on behalf of the company service of process and any notices required to be served on the company; and, in the event of any alteration being made in any such instrument or in the directors or in the names or addresses of any such persons as aforesaid, the company must file with the registrar a notice of the alteration within such time as may be prescribed (k).

Any process or notice required to be served on the company will be sufficiently served if addressed to any person whose name has been so filed and left at or sent by post to the address which has been so filed.

Every company to which this section applies must in every year file with the registrar such a statement in the form of a balance sheet as would, if it were a company formed and registered under the Act, and having a share capital be required to be included in the annual summary.

Every company to which this section applies and which uses the word " limited " as part of its name must—

(g) Place of business includes a share transfer or share registration office, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 274 (6). A company which merely employs agents for the purpose of obtaining subscriptions here will not thereby have " established a place of business: " Huron v. Erie Loan and Saving Co., [1911] S. C. 612.

(h) Certified means certified in the prescribed (i.e., prescribed by the Board of Trade) manner to be a true copy or correct translation, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 274 (6), and s. 285. Regulations of the Board of Trade of 29th March, 1909, contain the provisions which are set out below.

(i) Director includes every person occupying the position of a director by whatever name called: ibid., s. 274 (6).

(k) I.e., within twenty-one days after the date on which the particulars of the alteration could in due course of post and if despatched with due diligence have been received in the United Kingdom from the place where the company is incorporated: Order of Board of Trade of 29th March, 1909.

(a) In every prospectus (l) inviting subscriptions for its shares or debentures in the United Kingdom state the country in which the company is incorporated ; and

(b) Conspicuously exhibit on every place where it carries on business in the United Kingdom the name of the company and the country in which the company is incorporated ; and

(c) Have the name of the company and of the country in which the company is incorporated mentioned in legible characters in all bill-heads and letter paper, and in all notices, advertisements, and other official publications of the company.

If any company to which this section applies fails to comply with any of the requirements of this section the company, and every officer and agent of the company, will be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, or, in the case of a continuing offence, five pounds for every day during which the default continues (m).

There must be paid to the Registrar for registering any document required by this section to be filed with him a fee of five shillings, or such smaller fee as may be prescribed by the Board of Trade (n).

The Regulations of the Board of Trade, dated 29th March, 1909, as the certification of copies and translations of documents which require to be filed under this section contain the following provisions—

(1) A certified copy of the charter, statutes, or memorandum and articles of association, or other instrument constituting or defining the constitution of a company in the case of a company incorporated in a foreign country required to be filed with the Registrar under section 274 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, shall be deemed to be certified as a true copy if in such foreign country it is—

(a) Duly certified as a true copy by an official of the Government to whose custody the original is committed, the signature or seal of such official being authenticated by any of the (l) Prospectus means any prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, or other invitation offering to the public for subscription or purchase any shares or debentures of the company: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 285.

(m) The offence may be prosecuted under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 276 (1); but in Scotland the prosecution is at the instance of the Lord Advocate or a procurator fiscal, as the Lord Advocate directs: ibid., s. 276 (2), and see s. 277 as to application of fines.

(n) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 274. These provisions apply to every assurance company, as defined by the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, constituted outside the United Kingdom which carries on assurance business within the United Kingdom, whether incorporated or not: Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 19.

British officials mentioned in section 6 of the Commissioners of Oaths Act, 1889, or in any Act amending the same ; or

(b) Duly certified as a true copy by a notary of such foreign country, the certificate of the notary being authenticated by any of the British officials mentioned in section 6 of the said Act or in any Act amending the same ; or

(c) Duly certified as a true copy on oath by some officer of the company before a person having authority to administer an oath as provided by section 3 of the said Act, the status of the person administering the oath being authenticated by any of the British officials mentioned in section 6 of the said Act, or in any Act amending the same.

(2) A certified copy of the charter, statutes, or memorandum and articles of association, or other instrument constituting or defining the constitution of a company, in the case of a company incorporated in the Channel Islands, Isle of Man, or in any colony, island, plantation, or place under the Dominion of His Majesty in foreign parts, required to be filed with the Registrar under section 274 aforesaid, shall be deemed to be certified as a true copy if in the Channel Islands, colony, island, plantation, or places under the Dominion of His Majesty, it is

(a) Duly certified as a true copy by an official of the Government to whose custody the original is committed.

(b) Duly certified as a true copy by a notary public of such colonies, islands, or places aforesaid.

(c) Duly certified as a true copy on oath by some officer of the company before some person having authority to administer an oath as provided by section 3 of the Commissioners of Oaths Act, 1889.

(3) In the case of a company in which the charter, statutes, or memorandum and articles of association, or other instrument constituting or defining the constitution of the company is not written in the English language a certified translation thereof required to be filed with the Registrar shall be deemed to be certified as a correct translation if certified to be a correct translation,

(a) When such translation is made out of the United Kingdom by

(1) An official having custody of the original ; or

(2) A notary public of the country or place where the company is incorporated, the signature or seal of the person so certifying where the company is incorporated in a foreign country being authenticated in either case by any of the British officials mentioned in section 6 of the Commissioners of Oaths Act, 1889, or in any Act amending the same ;

(b) Where such translation is made within the United Kingdom

(1) In the case of a translation made in regard to a company whose place of business is established in England, by

(1) A notary public in England, or

(2) A solicitor of the Supreme Court in England.

(2) In the case of a translation made in regard to a company whose place of business is established in Ireland, by

(1) A notary public in Ireland, or

(2) A solicitor of the Supreme Court in Ireland.

(3) In the case of a translation made in regard to a company whose place of business is established in Scotland, by

(1) A notary public in Scotland,

(2) An enrolled law agent.

(4) The Board of Trade may in any particular case, if they think fit to do so and upon such conditions as they think fit, permit certified copies or translations though not certified in accordance with the above requirements to be filed with the Registrar.

Prior to the passing of the Act of 1907, which first introduced these provisions, it was settled law that a foreign corporation which carried on business here must be considered as resident here, and must be equally liable to service as if it were resident here (o) ; it is thought that this will still be the law in the case of foreign corporations which fail to comply with the section. This does not apply to Scotch or Irish companies on which the Companies Acts (p) or some other Act (q) prescribes a special mode of service, but it does apply (r) to Scotch and Irish companies where this is not the case.

Section 274 (3) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, is as follows :—

" (3) Every company to which this section applies shall in every year file with the registrar such a statement in the form of a balance sheet as would, if it were a company formed and registered under this Act, and having a share capital, be required under this Act to be included in the annual summary."

The statement above-mentioned is described in section 26 (3) of the Act as follows :—

" Statement in the form of a balance sheet audited by the Company's auditors, and containing a summary of its share capital, its liabilities, and its assets, giving such particulars as will disclose the general nature of those liabilities and assets, and how the values of the fixed assets have been arrived at, but the balance sheet need not include a statement of profit and loss."

For the purposes of the registration of companies under the Act, the Act provides that there shall be offices in England, Scotland, and Ireland, at such places as the Board of Trade think fit (b).

(b) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 243. The offices existing at the commencement of the Act in England, Scotland, and Ireland for registration of joint stock companies are continued as if they had been established under the Act, and registers of companies kept in any such existing offices are respectively to be deemed part of the registers

The Board of Trade may appoint such registrars, assistant registrars, clerks, and servants as the Board think necessary for the registration of companies under the Act, and may make regulations with respect to their duties; and may remove any persons so appointed.

The salaries of the persons appointed under this section are fixed by the Board of Trade with the concurrence of the Treasury, and paid out of money provided by Parliament.

The Board of Trade may require that the office of the Registrar of the Court exercising in respect of the winding-up of companies the stannaries jurisdiction shall be one of the offices for the registration of companies within that jurisdiction; and may direct a seal or seals to be prepared for the authentication of documents required for or connected with the registration of companies.

Any person may inspect the documents kept by the Registrar on payment of such fees as may be appointed by the Board of Trade, not exceeding one shilling for each inspection; and any person may require a certificate of the incorporation of any company, or a copy or extract of any other document or any part of any other document, to be certified by the Registrar, on payment for the certificate, cerfied copy, or extract, of such fees as the Board of Trade may appoint, not exceeding five shillings for a certificate of incorporation, and not exceeding sixpence for each folio of a certified copy or extract, or in Scotland for each sheet of two hundred words.

A copy of or extract from any document kept and registered (c) at any of the offices for the registration of companies in England, Scotland, or Ireland, certified to be a true copy under the hand of the Registrar or an Assistant Registrar (whose official position it is not necessary to prove) will in all legal proceedings be admissible in evidence as of equal validity with the original document.

of companies to be kept under the Act. The existing registrars, assistant registrars, officers, clerks, and servants in those offices are during the pleasure of the Board of Trade to hold the offices and receive the salaries hitherto held and received by them, but subject to any regulations of the Board of Trade with regard to the execution of their duties. The existing official receivers and officers of the Board of Trade appointed for the execution of the Companies (Winding-Up) Act, 1890, are during the pleasure of the Board of Trade to hold the offices and receive the salaries or remuneration hitherto held and received by them—and persons other than officers of the Board of Trade performing any duties under the Companies (Winding-Up) Act, 1890, and receiving therefor any salary or remuneration by the direction of the Lord Chancellor, are, during his pleasure, to receive the salaries or remuneration hitherto received by them, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 289.

(c) The Registrar will register a document after the expiration of the time limited for that purpose by the Act—except in cases where the court has power to extend the time for registration, when an order of the Court will be necessary.

Whenever any Act is by the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, directed to be done to or by the Registrar of Companies, it will, until the Board of Trade otherwise directs, be done in England to or by the existing Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, or in his absence to or by such person as the Board of Trade may for the time being authorise ; in Scotland to or by the existing Registrar of Joint Stock Companies in Scotland ; and in Ireland to or by the existing Assistant Registrar of Joint Stock Companies for Ireland, or to or by such person as the Board of Trade may for the time being authorise in Scotland or Ireland, in the absence of the Registrar or Assistant Registrar ; but in the event of the Board of Trade altering the constitution of the existing registry offices or any of them, any such act must be done to or by such officer and at such place with reference to the local situation of the registered officer of the companies to be registered as the Board of Trade may appoint (d).

There are to be paid to the Registrar in respect of the several matters mentioned in Table B in the First Schedule to the Act the several fees therein specified, or such smaller fees as the Board of Trade may from time to time direct.

All fees paid to the Registrar in pursuance of the Act must be paid into the Exchequer (dd).

The following is the table of fees set out in Table B.

TABLE OF FEES TO BE PAID TO THE REGISTRAR OF COMPANIES (e).

THE MEMORANDUM AND ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION.

As has been stated, the Act allows of three different kinds of companies registering under it—(a) companies limited by shares; (b) companies limited by guarantee; and (c) unlimited companies—and there are in addition certain companies formed under earlier Acts which may register under the existing Act.

The memorandum of association of companies limited by shares must state—

(i) The name of the company, with "Limited" as the last word in its name;

(ii) The part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is to be situate;

(iii) The objects of the company;

(iv) That the liability of the members is limited;

(v) The amount of share capital with which the company proposes to be registered, and the division thereof into shares of a fixed amount:

(2) No subscriber of the memorandum may take less than one share:

(3) Each subscriber must write opposite to his name the number of shares he takes (a).

Although, as has already been stated, there must be two subscribers in the case of private companies, and seven in other cases, such persons need not be independent persons—and a company will be validly formed if all the subscribers are the nominees of one person, or if all but one of them are nominees of that one (b).

The memorandum of a company limited by guarantee (c) or of an unlimited company (d) must state

(a) The name of the company, with limited as the last word in the case of a company limited by guarantee;

(b) The part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is to be situate; and

(c) The objects of the company.

(a) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 3.

(b) Salomon v. Salomon & Co., [1897] A. C. 22; but cp. Re Darby, [1911] 1 K. B. 95.

(c) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 4.

(d) Ibid., s. 5.

In addition the memorandum of a company limited by guarantee must state

(d) That the liability of the members is limited ; and

(e) That each member undertakes to contribute to the assets of the company in the event of its being wound up while he is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the company contracted before he ceases to be a member, and of the costs, charges, and expenses of winding-up, and for adjustment of rights of the contributories among themselves, such amount as may be required, not exceeding a specified amount.

And if the company has a share capital, the amount of the share capital with which the company proposes to be registered, and the division thereof into shares of a fixed amount.

If a company limited by guarantee or an unlimited company has a share capital, no subscriber to the memorandum may take less than one share, and each subscriber must write opposite his name the number of shares he takes.

In the case of a company limited by guarantee, and not having a capital divided into shares, and being a company registered on or after the first day of January, nineteen hundred and one (being the date of the commencement of the Companies Act, 1900), every provision in the memorandum or articles or in any resolution of the company purporting to give any person a right to participate in the divisible profits of the company otherwise than as a member will be void.

For the purpose of the provisions of the Act relating to the memorandum of a company limited by guarantee and of section 21 of the Act, every provision in the memorandum or articles, or in any resolution of any company limited by guarantee and registered on or after the 1st day of January, 1901, purporting to divide the undertaking of the company into shares or interests will be treated as a provision for a capital divided into shares, notwithstanding that the nominal amount or number of the shares or interests is not specified thereby (e).

This section and the provision requiring a company limited by guarantee, and having a share capital to state such share capital in the memorandum of association were first introduced by the Companies Act, 1900—apparently to meet the decision in Malleson v. General Mineral Patents Syndicate (f).

A company may not alter the conditions contained in its memorandum except in the cases and in the mode and to the extent for which express provision is contained in the Act (g). This prohibition extends not only to conditions which the Act requires to be set out in the memorandum, but also to other conditions which are in fact set out there (h) ; but if the memorandum contains a power to alter any conditions, which the Act does not require to be set out in the memorandum, such a power will be valid (i).

A company (k) registered as unlimited may register under the Act as limited, and a company registered as limited may re-register under the Act ; but the registration of an unlimited company as a limited company does not affect any debts, liabilities, obligations, or contracts incurred or entered into by, to, with or on behalf of the company before the registration, and those debts, liabilities, obligations, and contracts may be enforced in manner provided by Part VII. of the Act in the case of a company registered in pursuance of that part (l). It is extremely difficult to see what can be effected by a limited company re-registering as a limited company unless, as is suggested in Buckley (m), a company limited by shares can turn itself into a company limited by guarantee, and vice versa ; but, as is there pointed out, if this is so, the difficulty of seeing why the proviso to the subsection should only apply to unlimited companies remains. Another suggestion, which does not seem to be open to the same objections, is that a limited company may under the section change the part of the United Kingdom in which its registered offices are situate. It is believed that no attempt has ever been made to carry either of these two suggestions into effect.

On the registration, in pursuance of this section of a company which has been already registered, the Registrar (n) must close the former registration of the company, and may dispense with the delivery to him of copies of any documents with copies of which he was furnished on the occasion of the original registration of the company ; but, save as aforesaid, the registration of such a company

The question of whether a power in the original articles of association to alter the memorandum is valid is discussed when the rights of the shareholders inter se are being considered : post, pp. 317 and 318, it is submitted that such a power is valid.

(k) The expression "company" in the Act is defined as meaning a company formed and registered under the Act or under the Act of 1862, or under the Joint Stock Companies Acts, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 285, and see the same section for a definition of the Joint Stock Companies Acts. On registration under this section the Registrar requires the same documents as in the case of a company registering under Part VII. of the Act, except in so far as such documents are already on the file.

(n) This is the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies in England, Scotland, Ireland, or the Stannaries, as the case requires (s. 285 of the Act). It is submitted that the Scotch or Irish Registrar might close the former registration—where re-registration had taken place in England.

takes place in the same manner, and has the same effect as if it were the first registration of that company under the Act, and as if the provisions of the Acts under which the company was previously registered and regulated had been contained in different Acts of Parliament from those under which the company is registered as a limited company (o).

An unlimited company having a share capital may, by its resolution for registration as a limited company in pursuance of the Act, do either or both of the following things, namely—

(1) Increase the nominal amount of its share capital by increasing the nominal amount of each of its shares, but subject to the condition that no part of the increased capital shall be capable of being called up except in the event and for the purposes of the company being wound up.

(2) Provide that a specified portion of its uncalled share capital shall not be capable of being called up except in the event and for the purposes of winding up (p).

A limited company may also provide by its original memorandum or by its memorandum as altered by special resolution for the liability of its directors or managers or managing director being unlimited (q).

Every company must send to every member at his request and on payment of one shilling or such less sum as the company may prescribe, a copy of its memorandum of association and articles (if any). A company making default on complying with these provisions will be liable to a fine not exceeding one pound for each offence (r).

With regard to the contents of the memorandum, a company may not be registered by a name identical with that by which a company in existence is already registered, or so nearly resembling that name as to be calculated to deceive, except where the company in existence is in the course of being dissolved, and signifies its consent in such manner as the registrar of joint stock companies

Every assurance company which is not registered under the Companies Acts, shall cause a sufficient number of copies of its deed of settlement or other instrument constituting the company to be printed, and shall, on the application of any shareholder or policy holder of the company, furnish to him a copy of such deed of settlement or other instrument on payment of a sum not exceeding one shilling: Assurance Companies Act, 1909, s. 11.

requires (s). This section does not prejudice any right a company would have apart from it (t); but, on the other hand, it does not seem to put a company, whether registered under the Act or not, in any better position than it would be without the section (u).

The position at common law is that any rights a person has to prevent another from using a particular name depends on either (a) fraud; or (b) property (x). He has a right to prevent a person taking or using a name which he has identified with his goods, with the deliberate intention of stealing the goodwill of his business; and he has a right to prevent another, however innocently, from depriving him of his goodwill, including the benefit of any trade name he has succeeded in appropriating and making his own (y).

Mere similarity of name will not be enough (z), the question, where it is not a case of fraud, will be—is what the defendant is doing calculated to make the public or the trade think that he is carrying on the business of the plaintiff? (a) This will in all cases be a question of fact for the judge or the jury (b), and evidence cannot be given to show that people in general are likely to be deceived, for that is the question to be tried (c).

There will in all cases be two important elements to be taken into consideration in ascertaining this fact, (a) the nature of the name, and (b) the nature of the businesses (d). No doubt an ordinary

English word may acquire a secondary meaning so as to denote only the goods of the plaintiff (e); but that will always be an extremely difficult thing to prove (f), and the fact that the plaintiff has had, for a time, a monopoly in that class of goods will render it more difficult still (g). These same remarks would appear to apply to the case of a name descriptive of the place where business is being carried on, or of the nature of such business (h).

With regard to the name of a person the court will never absolutely prevent a person from carrying on business in his own name (i), but where he sells the right to use that name to a company unattached to any goodwill, e.g., if he has never carried on the business in question, or has ceased to do so, it will restrain the company from using that name (k); it will, however, refuse to interfere with a man who has genuinely been carrying on his own business under his own name, and sells that business with the right to carry it on in such name to a company (l), and it will be slow to interfere with a foreign company which starts carrying on business here, in its own name (m).

With regard to other instances, it was held in one case that a person who had carried on the business of a lending library under the style of the Grosvenor Library, was entitled to prevent a company carrying on business under that name, as the plaintiff's customers were likely to think it was a new branch of his business (n). In another case an insurance company was restrained from carrying on its business in the same street as the plaintiff company under a name which, like the plaintiff company's name, had the word

"guardian" as its first word (o), and a company registered under the name of the Accident, Disease and General Insurance Company was restrained from using that name, though registered under it, at the suit of the Accident Insurance Company (p).

A brewery company has been prevented from using a name which was calculated to lead people to believe that its business was the result of an amalgamation with the plaintiff's business (q); but persons who had carried on business as cycle and motor cycle repairers were not restrained from forming a company under their own name, though people might be induced to believe they were connected with motor car manufacturers in a large way of business who had previously carried on business and formed a company under a similar name (r). Companies cannot register or be prosecuted for offences under the Pharmacy Act, 1868 (s), or the Dentists Act, 1878 (t), but they can be restrained from using a name which implies that they are registered under those Acts (u) or representing that they are so registered (x).

A plaintiff, whether a company registered under the Act (y) or not (z), can restrain persons from registering a company under a name calculated to deceive, and in one case—a case of fraud—not only was the company restrained from using its name and the signatories to its memorandum from allowing it to do so, but the signatories were restrained from allowing it to remain registered in that name. The alternative left to the defendants, as the plaintiff was a foreign company, and section 8 (2) of the Act was therefore not available, being either with the consent of the Board of Trade to change its name by special resolution, or to wind up (a).

Like individuals, companies can carry on business in names which are not their own (b). In such case they are bound under pain of penalties to paint or affix and keep painted or affixed, their own name outside every place of business (c), but if they fail to do so, that will not disentitle them to relief (d). The court, however, will not protect a fraudulent business (e), nor a plaintiff who has delayed his suit and lain by while the defendant was to his knowledge acting (f). Where a company proposes to register with a fraudulent name, the registrar may decline to register (g). The Registrar will, owing to an order of the Board of Trade made some years back, usually not register a company with a name which contains the word "Royal," "Imperial," or any similar word, unless the leave of the Home Secretary has been obtained (h). Since the passing of the Geneva Convention Act, 1911, the words "Red Cross" or "Geneva Cross," are not allowed to form part of the name of a company without the authority of the Army Council. Application should be made to the War Office where such authority is desired.

If a company, through inadvertence or otherwise, is registered by a name identical with that by which an existing company is previously registered, without the consent of such other company if it is being dissolved, or so nearly resembling it as to be calculated to deceive, it may, with the sanction of the Registrar, change its name (hh). The Registrar in such case requires a resolution of the company authenticated by the secretary or some other officer of the company.

Any company may, by special resolution, and with the approval of the Board of Trade signified in writing, change its name (hh).

Where a company changes its name, the Registrar must enter the new name on the register in place of the former name, and must issue a certificate of incorporation altered to meet the circumstances of the case (hh).

(h) Section 68 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, prohibits the use of words calculated to suggest Royal patronage—but except where this provision applies, it is difficult to see how the Registrar gets jurisdiction to refuse to register in such cases, for they would not seem to raise a case of fraud, and s. 243 (2) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act scarcely seems to justify the Order of the Board of Trade. Royal Worcester Corset Co., [1909] 1 Ch. 459, seems to support this view, for Rule 12 of the rules under the Trade Marks Act, 1905, was apparently only supported because of s. 11 of that Act. See also Royal Baking Powder Co. (1902), 19 Rep. Pat. Cas. 261.

(hh) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 8.

The change of name does not affect any rights or obligations of the company, or render defective any legal proceedings by or against the company, and any legal proceedings that might have been continued or commenced against it by its former name may be continued or commenced against it by its new name (i). The Board of Trade will give a provisional assent to a change of name before the special resolution is passed or confirmed. Sometimes the Board of Trade withholds its approval until the company alters its objects under section 9 of the Act (ii) or complies with some other requirement. The secretary or solicitor of the company should send a letter to the Board of Trade stating the reasons for the proposed change of name. If the Board approves of the change of name, its licence must be sent to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies for filing. A fee of five shillings must accompany the licence.

A company retains its old name until the new certificate of incorporation has been issued (k). Where a new name has been taken the Court will not, even where the special resolution has not been duly passed, make an order vacating the registration of such new name and restoring to the company its old name, but it will, where the new name has been taken by reason of an order of its own, e.g. on a change of objects under section 9 of the Act, vacate such order (l).

It would appear that where two companies apply simultaneously to register under the same name, and there is a dispute as to which is entitled to the name, the Registrar need not register either until the matter has been decided by the proper tribunal (m).

Persons trading or carrying on business under any name or title of which "Limited" is the last word will, unless duly incorporated with limited liability, be liable to a fine not exceeding £5 for every day upon which the name or title has been used (n). A solicitor who enters an appearance for such persons under such name will be personally liable for costs (o).

Where it is proved to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade that an association about to be formed as a limited company is to be formed for promoting commerce, art, science, religion, charity, or any other useful object, and intends to apply its profits (if any) or other income in promoting its objects, and to prohibit the payment of any dividend to its members, the Board may by licence direct that the association be registered as a company with limited liability, without the addition of the word "Limited" to its name, and the association may be registered accordingly.

The licence by the Board of Trade may be granted on such conditions and subject to such regulations as the Board think fit, and those conditions and regulations will be binding on the association, and must, if the Board so direct, be inserted in the memorandum and articles, or in one of those documents (p).

The association will on registration enjoy all the privileges of limited companies, and be subject to all their obligations, except those of using the word "Limited" as any part of its name, and of publishing its name, and of sending lists of members and directors and managers to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.

A licence under this section may at any time be revoked (q) by the Board of Trade, and upon revocation the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies must enter the word "Limited" at the end of the name of the company upon the register, and the company will cease to enjoy the exemptions and privileges granted by the section.

Before a licence is revoked the Board of Trade must give notice in writing of their intention to the company, and afford the company an opportunity of being heard in opposition to the revocation (r).

The procedure in these cases is indicated by the memorandum of the Board of Trade, which is in the following terms:—

FORM OF ADVERTISEMENT (t).

Application for a licence of the Board of Trade.

Notice is hereby given that in pursuance of the 20th section of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, application has been made to the Board of Trade for a licence directing an association about to be formed under the name of   to be registered as a company with limited liability without the addition of the word limited to its name.

The objects for which the association is proposed to be formed are [here specify the main object] and other objects specified in its memorandum of association, a copy of which can be inspected at the office of Messrs.   No.   Street in the city of London.

(t) The advertisement generally appears from two weeks to a month before the last day for sending in objections.

Notice is hereby further given that any person, corporation, or company objecting to this application may bring such objection before the Board of Trade on or before the day of 19 , by a letter addressed to the Comptroller of the Companies Department, Board of Trade, 27, Great George Street, London, S.W.

The next requirement of the memorandum of association is that it must state the part of the United Kingdom, whether England, Scotland, or Ireland, in which the registered office of the company is to be situate. It would seem that there is no way of altering the part of the United Kingdom in which the registered office of the company is situate, unless it can be done by re-registering under section 57 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (u).

"THE OBJECTS OF THE COMPANY."

The wording here differs slightly from that in the old Act of 1862. That Act required the memorandum to state "the objects for which the proposed company is established" (x). The forms given in the schedules to the two Acts are, however, identical (y), in both cases the object clauses stating that "the objects for which the company is established are" to do one particular named thing, and it is thought that the alteration is merely a verbal alteration.

If this is so the cases under the older Act still hold good.

This object clause limits the powers of the company (z). The company is incorporated subject to the conditions of its charter—i.e. its memorandum—and even the assent of every single shareholder will not authorize any act done, if it goes beyond what is stated to be the objects of the company; any such act is ultra vires (a), and is simply not the act of the company (b).

In memoranda of the present day it is usual, not to follow the shortness of the forms given in the schedules, but to give a long list of diverse objects, and often to add a clause stating that each of such objects is a separate and independent object. Such last clause would appear not really to add to the powers of a company (c), for it would seem that the real question to be decided—when the question arises whether a company is doing an ultra vires act or carrying on an ultra vires business—is yes or no is the company carrying on the business which it was originally intended it should carry on (d), or doing an act to further such business, or is it carrying on a business which at its inception was not really contemplated, except possibly as an expedient in the event of the real business failing ?

In answering this question the Court will struggle to read the memorandum in such a way as to make it honestly comply with the intention of the legislature, and will, it would seem, give strong effect to the rule of construction which is contained in the words noscitur a sociis (e). The Court will to find the real object look at the original name of the company, but it ought not to look at the prospectus or the acts of the promoters (f). Thus a company formed to carry out a scheme of warehousing in conjunction with the Metropolitan Railway, was held not to be carrying on its business, when it was simply lending its money out at interest, though that was one of its objects as stated in its memorandum (g), and a company formed to work a German patent for manufacturing coffee from dates was not, when that patent failed, allowed to work a Swedish patent, or to manufacture coffee from dates without a patent, though its memorandum contained powers to acquire other patents and to import and export all sorts of produce (h); and a company formed to work a particular mine in New Zealand was not allowed, when it proved to have no title to such mine, to acquire another mine in spite of wide words in its memorandum (i).

(d) The cases seem to go back to the old partnership case of Baring v. Dix (1786), 1 Cox. 213.

(e) In Ashbury Railway and Carriage Co. v. Riche (1875), L. R. 7 H. L. 653, a company formed to sell railway carriages, was not entitled to acquire and work a concession for a foreign railway, though it was authorized to carry on the business of general contractors.

Nor was a company formed under the name of the Northamptonshire Bank, Ltd. for the purpose of carrying on a country bank in that county allowed to change its venue to London, and to carry on there under a changed name a business of land speculation, company promoting, and speculating in stocks and shares, although its memorandum contained the widest imaginable assortment of objects (k).

Again, companies formed to work a particular mine have been held not entitled, under powers to work mines elsewhere, to work (l) or to promote subsidiary companies to work (m) another mine, when the original mine had proved a failure.

In a later case (n) on the subject, however, a company named after a particular mine was, because it had power to work mines elsewhere, held to be a company incorporated for general mining purposes, and not to work a particular mine only. It was therefore entitled to work a second mine, after the original one had proved a failure. In this case the decision of the Court of Appeal in the Coolgardie Mines case (o) was apparently not cited.

Nor did wide powers avail a company, formed to take over other companies, whose businesses were the letting of seats for the Diamond Jubilee, where it proposed to do other business after that event (p). There are, it is true, a few cases which give a wider construction to the memorandum. Thus in one case, where a company proposed under general words to add to its original business of fire insurance other forms of insurance (q), the Court refused to apply the rule of noscitur a sociis to the construction of the insurance clauses in its memorandum (q). And in two other cases very wide clauses were construed so as to make all the objects enumerated separate and independent (r).

L. T. 111, seems scarcely consistent with these cases.

It would appear that the bulk of authority is in favour of giving a limited construction to the object clause in the memorandum, in so far as such clause contains objects properly so called, and not mere powers. But where a company is formed not to work a particular undertaking, but an undertaking of a certain class, as, for instance, a hotel anywhere in London (s) or a skating rink (t), the company can carry on such undertaking on a smaller scale than was originally contemplated, even where an attempt to carry on such undertaking on the original lines has failed, thus a company formed to work breweries at Brighton, and in particular to acquire a certain specified brewery, was entitled to start business in a small way with another brewery there (u).

We come now to the question of the powers which the company will have to carry on its main object.

These may be divided into two classes—

1. Those which are so necessary for carrying out the main object of the company as to be implied.

2. Those powers, which though not so necessary as to be implied, are yet consistent with and reasonably conducive to the furtherance of such main objects. This latter class of power will, where expressly given by the memorandum or, it would seem, by the articles of association, be valid (x).

With regard to the first class, it is very usual to add to the object clause of the memorandum general words, such as "and the doing of all such other things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects."

A good deal of weight was apparently put on these words in one of the earlier cases (y), and in another case where the general words were wider, as they made the directors of the company the judges of what was conducive to the attainment of the company's objects, Lord Cairns held that a company could by virtue of the general words make promissory notes, though apart from them it could not have done so (z).

The general tendency of the later cases seems, however, to be to treat these general words as simply expressing what in their absence would have been implied, and not as enlarging the implied powers of the company (a).

(a) Johns v. Balfour (1889), 1 Meg. 191; Studdert v. Grosvenor

It would appear that such powers will be implied as are reasonably necessary for attaining the objects of the company (b). Thus, in the course of carrying on its business a company can do anything which is usual in carrying on a business of that class, or, in other words, it has implied power to do such things as would be binding on a partnership carrying on the same business, if done by one partner (c). Thus an ordinary trading partnership has implied power to borrow money, and to give security for money so borrowed (d), and may give security for a past debt (e), though before the Companies Act of 1907 a trading company could not create perpetual debentures (f), and a banking company can lend money on the security of shares in another company, and can accept transfers of such shares (g). Usually a company if it has simply power to mortgage (h), or even if its main business is lending money on mortgage (i), cannot, it would seem, guarantee the debt of a prior mortgagee ; a banking company, however, can give guarantees, and can therefore guarantee the debt of a prior mortgagee (k).

A company with power to borrow can take over a prior mortgage and can enter on the mortgaged property and put it into repair (l).

Non-trading corporations, such as building societies (m), mining companies (n), telegraph companies (o), literary and social institutions (p) have no borrowing powers (q), and, contrary to the view that formerly prevailed (r), an overdraft at the bank for this purpose amounts to borrowing (s).

Again, a trading company can issue, make and endorse promissory notes and bills of exchange (t), but in the absence of special power in that behalf—a railway company (u), a waterworks company (x), a mining company (y), a salt and alkali company (z), or a company formed for keeping a swimming bath (a), could not do so.

An insurance company can pay on losses for which they are strictly speaking not liable, in cases where it is usual for persons carrying on a similar business to pay (b).

On the other hand, a company formed to carry on the business of a bill broker and scrivener, and to make advances and invest in securities, was held not entitled to promote another company, with the idea of thereby increasing its discount business (c), and without express power in that behalf a company cannot acquire shares in another company (d) except as an investment for funds which are temporarily unemployed (e), and cannot purchase the undertaking of another company (f). A company formed to do life-assurance business only cannot undertake marine insurance (g). Any company can, it appears, enter into a bonâ fide compromise, provided that the terms of the compromise do not involve the doing of an ultra vires act (h). Moreover, a company will have such implied powers in the management of their business and generally in the affairs of the company as are reasonably necessary for those purposes. Thus a company may make any use it pleases of property acquired for the purpose of its business, where it is temporarily not required for such purpose.

Under this rule a hotel company has been allowed to let off part of its hotel (i), and a brewery company which had acquired larger premises than it required was held to be entitled to grant a lease of part of such premises (k).

Again, although less powers will be implied in the case of a statutory company than in the case of an ordinary company (l), railway companies have been held entitled to let out arches under their railway (m), to charge persons using their weighing-machines (n), and to run as excursion steamers steamboats, which were required for the purposes of their undertaking, but which were temporarily not required for their ordinary work (o).

Further, a company can build up a reserve fund, and when it has moneys unemployed in its business, can invest them (p).

A company may acquire and deal with any property which it is necessary for it to work or use in the course of carrying on its business. Here we are not speaking of property such as goods bought to be immediately sold again in the ordinary course of business, but of property as, for instance, land (q), which is required for more or less permanent retention and use in the working of the company's business.

(q) All companies, formed under the Act, or the previous Act of 1862, have power to hold lands; but companies formed for the purpose of promoting art, science, religion, charity, or any other like object, not involving the acquisition of gain by the company or by its individual members, may not hold more than two acres of land without the licence of the Board of Trade; but the Board of Trade may empower such companies to hold as much land as the Board think fit: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 19. See ante, p. 13.

Thus a company formed to work mines was, after it had acquired a leasehold interest in such mines, held entitled to purchase the freehold of the mines and the surface over the same, and to let off the surface (r). A company formed to work a colliery was held entitled to purchase the colliery (s), and a company formed to work a patent was entitled to purchase the patent (t).

In another case it was held that a company could sell lands which it had power to acquire (u). A company has wide powers in dealing with its employees and generally in conducting its own internal affairs.

Thus it may, except where its business has come to an end (x), pay a bonus to (y) or pension off (z) its old employees. These cases are, it is true, cases of presents made by the company, but they are, it would seem, treated as cases where sums have been expended, with a view to obtaining increased efficiency in the staff in the future. Apart from cases coming under this head, a company cannot make presents (a).

The recent case of Peel v. London and North Western Railway (b) also throws important light on this branch of the law. It was there held that the funds of the company could be applied in sending out circulars and proxy papers stamped and filled up with the view of inducing shareholders to support the policy of the directors on a point in controversy. This case has additional importance by reason of the fact that for practical purposes it does away with two earlier decisions, one of which (c) decided that the funds of the society could not be applied for the purpose of prosecuting persons who had libelled the council of administration, and the other of which (d) decided that the funds of the society could not be applied in prosecuting an action for the benefit of the company instituted by a shareholder suing on behalf of himself and all other shareholders of the company.

It had previously been decided that a corporation which conducted a newspaper could apply its funds in defending its editor in an action brought against him for a libel contained in the newspaper (e).

Similarly it has been held that it is not ultra vires a company to certify transfers (f), or to apply its funds in paying brokerage (g). A company has also implied power to receive payment in money's worth, and not in money, for its shares (h).

Of course, all these implied powers of a company must in every case be taken subject to this—they will be excluded if there is anything in the company's memorandum or articles which negatives their existence.

2. The powers, which though not so necessary to the company as to be implied, are yet reasonably conducive to the furtherance of its objects. These powers must be expressly given, but they are not properly objects of the company at all, and consequently they can just as well be given by the articles as by the memorandum (i). Indeed, there are many powers given by the Act to a company if it has a provision in that behalf in its regulations (k)—i.e., its articles—and, where this is the case, a provision in the memorandum will be useless (l). Where powers are contained in the memorandum of association they become unalterable (m), unless there is a provision in the memorandum itself or incorporated therein by reference enabling them to be altered, or, possibly, a power in the original articles (n). In this respect powers and rights given by the memorandum, but not by the Act required to be contained therein, differ from those which must be set out therein; a condition enabling them to be altered is not void (o). Further, the original articles may be looked at in construing such provisions (p). However, probably even with regard to these matters, the memorandum of association will, in case of conflict, prevail (q).

Of course, any power which is contrary to the letter or spirit of the Act will, even if contained in the memorandum, be void (r).

Further, it would seem that a power which is inconsistent with the objects of the company, would be invalid.

But powers enabling a company to sell its entire undertaking for shares in another company, have so long as the company is a going concern, been held to be good (s), but a power to sell its whole undertaking and to divide the proceeds; in other words, to sell not only its present business, but any other business it may afterwards acquire is bad (t).

A company which is not registered under the Act can, if it has power in its deed, amalgamate or transfer its business (u).

Again, where a company had for some years carried on business, without success, a power to lease, was held to authorize a lease of all its property for twenty-one years (x).

Again, under an express power a company may take shares in another company (y).

Express powers of borrowing (z) or of issuing promissory notes (a) will enable companies not otherwise entitled to do these things to do them.

It is not unusual for a memorandum of association to contain powers enabling a company to enter into arrangements for sharing profits with other companies, apart from express authority to do so, it is thought a company could not enter into such an arrangement (b), and under a general power to borrow money a company cannot usually borrow jointly with other companies (c).

Another very common power is a power to apply for special Acts of Parliament. Whether such a power would authorize a company to spend its funds on such an application would seem very doubtful. The authorities on the subject all arose in the cases of companies incorporated by special Act of Parliament (d), but they seem to be founded on the principle that it is quite outside the province of a company to undertake to remodel the laws of the realm, even though the company might reap profit thereby. This principle does not apply to opposing proceedings in Parliament, and a company can take this course if it has, or probably if it has not, an express power in that behalf (e).

Although it may be that the funds of a company may not be applied in promoting bills, the Court will not restrain the use of a company's name in such proceedings (f). The usual course being for individuals to bear the original cost, and to insert a clause in the bill providing for their reimbursement by the company. Of course, this will only become operative if the bill becomes law. The Registrar of Joint Stock Companies will not register a memorandum which contains objects which bring the company within the provisions of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, unless the requirements of the Act have been complied with or which enable the company to carry on a telephone or telegraph business in the United Kingdom, or which enable it to carry out any unlawful objects such as a lottery, or which authorize it to fly a foreign flag on a ship, or which make it a trade union. A company formed to carry out specified objects and any other objects approved by the signatories to its memorandum was required to insert a proviso referring to section 9 of the Act.

particular cases there specified by special resolution. This power, however, is practically never used, and there is also power to alter the memorandum in this respect with the sanction of the Court under section 9 of the Act (h). Where the objects of a friendly society which has been converted into a company include assurance or insurance business of any description, the objects of the company can in no case extend beyond those of the society before conversion, except so far as may be necessary for carrying out contracts, assurances or policies made, entered into, or issued before the 3rd of August, 1910 (i).

In the case of a limited company, the memorandum must state it is limited. This rule applies to a company which has obtained a licence from the Board of Trade to dispense with the word "limited" at the end of its name (k).

CAPITAL OF A COMPANY.

A company limited by shares is a company having the liability of its members limited by its memorandum to the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares respectively held by them (l).

Such a company must state in its memorandum the amount of its capital, and the division thereof into shares of a specified amount (m), and its memorandum of association is, as already stated, so far as matters which must be stated in it are concerned, unalterable except where the Act provides for alteration. In the event of such a company being wound up, its members are liable to contribute to the assets of the company to an amount sufficient for payment of its debts and liabilities and the costs and expenses of the winding-up, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories among themselves, with this qualification that no contribution can be required from any member exceeding the amount, if any, unpaid on the shares in respect of which he is liable as a member (n).

It will be noticed that this last section cuts down what would be the ordinary liability of a shareholder, and is not a section imposing a fresh liability; further, the liability is the amount unpaid, not the amount due in respect of the members' shares.

It follows that in respect of each share, the full amount, specified in the memorandum, as the amount of such share, must be paid—in other words, it is ultra vires of a company to issue shares at a discount, it cannot issue them at less than their par value (o), even where its memorandum gives it power to issue shares at a discount (p).

The underwriting provisions of the Act, which are dealt with later, do to a certain extent allow an exception to this rule.

Further, a company cannot contract with a shareholder that no calls shall be made on him for adjusting the rights of contributories among themselves; whether it is a question of making calls for the purpose of paying the debts of the company or the costs of winding it up, or merely for the purpose of adjusting the rights of members, each shareholder will be liable to pay the full nominal value of his shares (q). But there are various ways in which shares may be paid for. They may in the first place be paid for in cash or in kind (r). If they are to be paid for in kind, there must be a regular agreement by which the company is to receive certain property, and in return is to issue certain shares in consideration for the same.

DEALINGS OF A COMPANY WITH ITS OWN SHARES.

Very soon after the limited liability Acts came into force, it was decided that a company taking the benefit of limited liability could not reduce the nominal value of even its fully paid shares (s). There was, however, for some time considerable doubt whether a limited company could or could not purchase its own shares, if it had a power in that behalf given by its memorandum or articles.

In the case of the Dronfield Silkstone Co. (t), Jessel, M.R., came to the conclusion that such a company could not do so. He pointed out that on the one hand a company could not reduce its issued capital because section 12 of the Companies Act, 1862 (u), the section which made the memorandum of association unalterable except as therein mentioned, applied to issued as well as unissued capital, as was shown by the fact that it allowed the conversion of fully paid-up shares into stock; and on the other hand, it could not become a shareholder in itself. On this last point he referred to the section which directs a company to keep a register of its members, and the sections which deal with the liability of contributories in a winding up and the mode of enforcing the same (x).

In the case in question there was only an article authorizing the company to purchase its own shares, but Sir George Jessel's reasoning applies with equal force to cases where there is a power in the memorandum, and also to a surrender of shares (y). Sir George Jessel's decision was reversed, but his view, and not the view of the Court of Appeal (z), has since prevailed (a), and his reasoning would seem to be the basis of all the law on the subject.

Thus it has since been held that a company cannot purchase its own shares (a), even where the purchase is expressly authorized by its memorandum (b), and that it cannot accept a surrender of partly paid shares releasing the holders from all further liability in respect of them (c), and it would seem that a company cannot accept a surrender of some of its shares, and issue new shares in the place of those surrendered (d).

It would appear, however, that a company can accept a surrender of shares, which it is in a position to forfeit, without going through all the formalities necessary for forfeiture (e); and it is quite clear that if it has power in that behalf given by its memorandum or as is more usual by its articles, a company may forfeit shares, in respect of which the holder has not paid calls when made, for this is a right expressly recognized by the Act, and by the model articles in the schedule to the Act (f).

Again, a company can in all probability accept a surrender of shares from a person who is in a position to annul his contract, e.g. where such contract has been induced by misrepresentation (g); or as part of an arrangement setting aside an agreement, which the company is for some other reason in a position to set aside, when the shares surrendered either alone or with goods or money which are returned as further part of such arrangement, formed the consideration for the agreement set aside.

But where there is a doubt whether the member who is seeking to set aside his contract to take shares is entitled to succeed, or whether the company is in a position to rescind, it is thought that the company cannot affirm the contract in part and make an arrangement by which shares forming part only of the consideration for the contract shall be cancelled (h). Such a compromise would be neither more nor less than a fresh agreement between the company and the other party to the original agreement, by which the company agrees to purchase its own shares ; and if a compromise of this sort is to be entered into the company should reduce its capital in the ordinary way (i).

Dixon v. Evans (k) is no authority to the contrary, for that was not the case of a limited company, and consequently the same considerations did not apply.

Since Trevor v. Whitworth (l) many of the previous cases on purchases and surrenders of shares must be treated as overruled (m). Where there has been an invalid purchase or surrender by a company of its own shares, the Court will, even after a lapse of years, order the register of the company to be rectified by restoring the name of the person whose shares have been purchased or surrendered (n).

Where shares have been forfeited it is usual for a company not to treat them as if they had never been issued, but to let them, even before they have been resold, appear amongst the issued shares in the balance-sheet of the company ; this practice would seem to be right.

trustees for the company will be personally liable to be placed on the list of contributories (o), and a broker who has received fees for purchasing a company's shares on its behalf will be liable to refund the money so received (p).

An unlimited company may, of course, purchase its own shares, where its articles give it power so to do (q), though presumably not otherwise (r), and a member of a company limited by guarantee which has no share capital may, if the articles so provide, retire. With regard to a shareholder of a company limited by guarantee, but which has a share capital, it would seem probable that the company cannot buy him out ; otherwise why should the memorandum and not the articles state such capital, and what is the meaning of section 56 of the Act, which provides for such a company reducing its share capital ? If this view is correct, it must be admitted that it is very difficult to give any meaning to clauses 1 and 2 of the articles of association in Form C in the Third Schedule to the Act (s).

DIVIDENDS.

Even before the passing of the limited liability Acts it was decided that a company which held itself out as having a certain capital could not pay dividends out of the moneys representing such part of its capital as had actually been paid up (t).

After the passing of the Act, 1862, it was decided that a company could not apply moneys it had received in respect of its shares in paying dividends where it had not made profits of any sort (u), and that it could not sell the assets which it had acquired with such monies and divide the proceeds of sale amongst its shareholders (x). Moreover, a company cannot pay debts which are only charged on and payable out of profits, out of capital, for the result of this would be that any amount out of which dividends could in the future be paid would be increased (y).

Where a company has sold part of its capital assets at a profit, with the result that the total value of its capital assets is in excess of its paid-up capital, the excess may at the end of the year be carried to profit and loss and be divided amongst its shareholders (z).

Further, where a company estimates that it has made a profit, it need not wait to realize all its assets to ascertain whether such profit has actually been made, but may in the ordinary course of its business pay a dividend on the footing of its estimate being a correct one (a).

So far the law is tolerably simple; but the question remains whether a company can pay dividends where it has made a profit on its profit and loss account, but has lost part of the assets representing its paid-up capital, without first replacing the assets so lost.

The cases on this subject depend on the fact that a company cannot return the property representing its paid-up capital, and cannot use such moneys for purposes other than those of its business, as has been said a limited company impliedly represents to or contracts with its creditors that it has capital or assets of a certain value, i.e. the amount of its paid-up capital, and it cannot by its voluntary act go back from such contract or representation (b).

The question really, then, comes back to this: does the company contract or represent that it has a certain amount of capital, i.e. moneys or property, representing the amount paid up on its shares, or does it represent or contract that its paid-up capital is represented by a certain amount of assets? If the former is the correct view, it may well be that a company which has funds other than what may be styled capital, e.g. profits shown on its profit and loss account, may divide such funds without regard to the state of its capital, for with regard to such other funds the company has made neither contract nor representation; if the latter view is correct, this obviously cannot be done, for, except where a company has assets to the extent of its paid-up capital, it would not be keeping its contract or making good its representation.

(z) Lubbock v. British Bank of South America, [1892] 2 Ch. 198; Foster v. New Trinidad Lake Asphalte Co., [1901] 1 Ch. 208; it would seem to follow from this that where shares have been issued at a premium, the premiums are not immediately or necessarily distributable; see also per ROMER, L.J., National Bank of Wales, [1899] 2 Ch. at p. 655: they may, however, be credited to profit, in the profit and loss account of the company if, when the balance sheet of the company is made up, its assets exceed its liabilities, including the amount paid on its shares.

(a) Stringer's Case (1869), 4 Ch. 475.

(b) Macdougall v. Jersey Hotel (1864), 2 H. & M. 528; Flitcroft's Case (1882), 21 C. D. 519; Rance's Case (1870), 6 Ch. 104. In this last case it was said that dividends could only be paid out of profits, though the article of the company said they could be paid out of assets.

In favour of this latter view it might well have been urged that throughout the Acts of 1862 and 1867 the word "capital" is used as meaning the nominal capital or the issued or unissued or the paid-up shares of a company, never as meaning the moneys or other property of the company; these latter are always comprised under the name of property or assets or such like (c); and consequently that the expression that a company cannot pay dividends out of capital would, if it occurred in the Acts, be meaningless.

This view also finds strong support from the fact that the Companies Act, 1877, which enabled a company to write off paid-up capital which had been lost, was notoriously passed to meet the inconveniences caused by the Ebbw Vale case (d), which decided that the paid-up capital of a company could not be written off if there had been a loss—inconveniences which were practically non-existent if a company could pay dividends in spite of such loss.

The earlier cases on the subject do not throw much light on the point. In Macdougall v. Jersey Hotel (e), Rance's Case (f), Holmes v. Newcastle-upon-Tyne Freehold Abattoir Co. (g) there had been no profit of any sort, and the same remark applies to Sharpe's case (h) and Guinness v. Land Corporation of Ireland (i); in all these cases the payment was not allowed. Payments were also disallowed in National Funds Assurance Co. (k), the Alexandra Palace Co. (l), the Oxford Benefit Building and Investment Society (m), and the Leeds Estate Building and Investment Co. v. Shepherd (n), all of which cases turned on the articles in the particular case.

Lambert v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co. (o), again, was argued and decided on the construction of the company's articles. In Mills v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres (p) a company which had charged certain revenue charges to capital was held entitled to recoup revenue out of capital, but as there is nothing in the report of this case to suggest that the capital of the company was not intact the case does not help in the solution of the question under discussion.

We now come to two cases which it has been said (q) can only be reconciled on the assumption that a company has only to look to profit and loss to ascertain if it can pay a dividend. These cases are Davison v. Gillies (r), where Jessel, M.R., restrained a company from paying a dividend on its ordinary shares though its profit and loss showed a sufficient surplus, because its permanent stock was depreciated, and Dent v. London Tramways (s), where the same judge stated that he was not sure that the earlier case decided as much as it was supposed to do, and declined to restrain the same company from paying a dividend on its non-cumulative preference shares. It does not appear whether there would have been sufficient to pay the preference dividend, if in earlier years the company had refrained from paying dividends on its ordinary shares and had kept up its permanent stock. The point of the case was, however, that as the preference shareholders could only look to the profits of each year for their dividend, the company could not set up their earlier misdeeds (if they were misdeeds) as against the preference shareholders. Their remedy, if any, was against the ordinary shareholders; in other words, the case turned on a kind of estoppel, and does not decide the question.

The Irish case of Kehoe v. Waterford and Limerick Railway (t) did decide that a company formed and governed by the Companies Clauses Acts, and not by the Companies Act, 1862, might pay a dividend, though it had not made good depreciation. The first really important case is, however, Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co. (u). This case could have been decided on the fact that the assets of the company did not show any depreciation, and it was decided on this ground in the Court of first instance, but the Court of Appeal went out of their way to say that a company with a wasting property, e.g. leaseholds or mines, need not set aside a sum in each year to meet such wastage before declaring a dividend.

This was followed in Bolton v. Natal Land and Colonization (x), where Romer, J., held that a land company could pay dividends though its assets were not equal to its issued capital and it had divided accretions to capital in previous years.

The next important case is Lubbock v. British Bank of South America (y), and this was important rather for the remarks of Chitty, J., than for the actual decision. He distinguished Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co. (z) by saying that that was the case of a company formed to work a wasting property, and seems to have laid down that in other cases a company must replace lost capital; he also pointed out the way in which companies not formed to work wasting properties should keep their balance sheets. These views, however, do not seem to have found favour in Verner v. General and Commercial Investment Trust (a); the company in this case was formed to make investments in certain specified classes of securities. The securities they held had greatly depreciated, but it was held that, notwithstanding this fact, the company could declare a dividend out of the profits shown by its profit and loss account. In this case Lindley, L.J., draws a distinction between "fixed" and "circulating" capital. A loss of the former, he said, need not be made good; a loss of the latter must. He also says that the rule is not that a dividend can only be paid out of profits (b), but (as he said) quite a different thing, that it cannot be paid out of capital. The reason for the rule, however, is, he says, that a dividend presupposes a profit, and that consequently it is necessary to ascertain the profits of each year.

This case was followed perhaps, somewhat reluctantly, in two cases (c) in courts of first instance, and also by North, J., in Bosanquet v. St. John D'El Rey Mining Co. (d), and then we come to the National Bank of Wales Case (e). The complaint in this case was that the bank had paid dividends in spite of the fact that it was treating certain debts as good, which it knew to be bad. Lindley, M.R., in delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal, lays it down that, excluding obvious cases, there is no hard and fast rule on the subject, and that dividends may be paid though there has been a loss of capital, and that the Court will not interfere to prevent losses being charged to capital, except where they are obviously chargeable to profit and loss, the whole matter being one for business men (f). This case went to the House of Lords under the name of Dovey v. Cory (g), but was there decided on a different point. All the law lords, however, guarded themselves from adopting the view of the Court of Appeal on the point. Lord Halsbury doubts if the matter can be treated as an abstract one at all, and says "that the manner in which a business is carried on and what is usual or the reverse may have a considerable influence in determining what may be treated as capital and what as profits," and he doubts whether the distinction between fixed and floating capital is always an appropriate one. Lord Macnaghten says it is undesirable to lay down any fixed rules, but Lord Davey expressly reserves his opinion as to whether a company which has made a definite and ascertained loss of fixed capital can pay a dividend, and subject to this disapproved of the view taken by the Court of Appeal.

The law as laid down by the case of Lee v. Neuchatel Asphalte Co. (h) and the cases that followed it was summed up by Farwell, J., in Bond v. Barrow Hæmatite Co. (i), and it seems to come to this, a company can pay dividends when its profit and loss is in credit, notwithstanding the fact that it has suffered losses of capital; but the question of what losses may be charged to capital and what must be charged to profit and loss is a matter to be decided by the Court on evidence as to what is usual in the particular trade.

This is the law which is binding on every Court short of the House of Lords, but as the matter can still be reconsidered by that tribunal (k), it may be well to make a few remarks on it. It is very true that the Court will not interfere with a company's internal affairs, including its mode of keeping accounts (l); but this doctrine is limited by the law that a company cannot do anything ultra vires, and it is admittedly ultra vires for a limited company, though not for an unlimited one, to pay dividends out of capital. The law as laid down in these cases depends on laying great emphasis on the word "capital" in the rule, but it is difficult to see why there should be any representation to or contract with creditors concerning the capital assets of the company only, seeing that their rights are against all its assets. It is difficult to justify the rule on the ground that the declaration of a dividend presupposes a profit of some sort, for this is true of limited and unlimited companies alike (m) if they seek to profit or get credit by saying they have earned a dividend, but otherwise does not apply, it is submitted to either class of company; if, on the other hand, the law depends on the fact that a limited company represents it has assets equal to its capital, as assets, property, etc., are, as already stated, the words which apply to the monies, lands, etc., of a company, there is a reason for the rule which can be found in the acts (n) and in the policy of the acts (o), and such reason does not apply to unlimited companies which make no such representation. The Court will, however, clearly not constitute itself the valuer of the company's assets, unless there is reason to think they have been improperly valued (oo). It remains to consider whether a dividend can be declared on the profit shown by the profit and loss account in one year, although the profit and loss of previous years shows a loss. In Crichton Oil Co. (p), Wright, J., said it could, but this view does not seem to have been approved by the Court of Appeal in the same case, and it is submitted that in such a case the company will have borrowed from capital to make good its deficiencies in previous years, and must make good its borrowings before it can declare a dividend (q).

A company which buys a business with the profits from a date prior to such purchase cannot, it is thought, distribute those profits, as they represent its capital outlay, unless when the time for distributing a dividend comes it has assets in excess of its paid-up capital (r).

It has been suggested (s) that this point can be met by the vendor first selling the business without the profits, and then giving the profits to the company as a present. It may well be doubted whether even so the profits of the business could be treated as profits of the company, and it would be very difficult to get a court to look upon the two transactions as separate.

Interest payable by reason of the default of a purchaser or profits earned after the date for completion, but before completion, can, it is thought, be credited to profit and loss.

Sometimes a vendor on the sale of a business guarantees that it will produce a certain profit for a year or a number of years, but it would seem that any moneys recovered under such a guarantee must be treated as capital, at all events where they form part of the assets of the company or part of the consideration for the purchase price (t). A company can release such a guarantee (u).

It is suggested in Palmer, vol. i. 10th Edition, pp. 329 and 330, that these cases are inconsistent with Trevor v. Whitworth (1887), 12 A. C. 409. They certainly seem contrary to principle, but have been followed in Scotland, Stark v. Fife Coal Co. (1899), 1 Fraser, 1173; Re Waterford Railway (1880), 5 L. R. Without express power in its articles a company cannot pay a dividend by distributing debentures (x), but if it has power to do this or to pay a share dividend (y) the power would seem to be good, but of course in the case of a share dividend the dividend payable would have to be at least equal to the amount credited as paid up on its shares. The rule that a company cannot pay a dividend which it has not earned was found somewhat harsh in the case of companies which issued shares to raise money for construction works or purchasing plant, which could not give any return for a considerable time; in such cases it was considered only reasonable that subject to proper safeguards the company should be at liberty to pay interest on the moneys so raised.

This question was met in the case of Indian Railway Companies by the Indian Railways Act, 1894 (z), but the Companies Act, 1907, introduced some fresh provisions which are incorporated in the present Act, and enable other companies to pay such dividends in certain cases.

A company may, if authorized to do so by its articles of association or a special resolution, with the previous sanction of the Board of Trade (a), pay interest on the amount for the time being paid up on any shares issued for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the construction of any works or buildings or the provision of any plant which cannot be made profitable for a lengthened period.

The rate of interest may in no case exceed 4 per cent. per annum or such lower rate as may for the time being be prescribed by order in council, and the payment may only be made for such period as may be determined by the Board of Trade, and such period must in no case extend beyond the close of the half-year next after the half-year during which the works or buildings have actually been completed or the plant provided.

(z) See also the Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1905, and the Indian Railways Amendment Act, 1906. An Indian Railway Company is a company registered under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1890, or any of them for the purpose of making and working a railway in India, either alone or in conjunction with other purposes (Indian Railways Act, 1894, s. 2). It applies of course to Companies registered under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908; see s. 38 of the Interpretation Act, 1889.

(a) In the Indian Railways Act, 1894, the previous sanction of the Secretary of State in Council of India is required (s. 3 (3)), and the memorandum of association or a special resolution must authorize the payment. The interest with the net earnings of the railway, in relation to the construction of which interest is paid, is not to exceed 4 per cent. (ibid. s. 3 (4)); no payment may be made unless the Secretary of State is satisfied that two-thirds of the capital on which interest is to be paid has been actually issued and accepted, and is held by persons who, or whose executors or administrators, are liable to the

A company may charge interest so paid to capital as part of the cost of construction of the work or building or the provision of the plant, and the accounts of the company must show the capital on which and the rate at which interest has been paid out of capital during the period to which the accounts relate (b).

The payment of such interest does not operate as a reduction of the amount paid up on the shares in respect of which it is paid.

Before sanctioning any such payment the Board of Trade may at the expense of the company appoint a person to inquire and report to them as to the circumstances of the case, and may before making the appointment require the company to give security for payment of the costs of the inquiry (c). On an application to the Board of Trade under these provisions the memorandum and articles of association of the company, and every prospectus, balance-sheet, contract, and other document bearing on the matter must be sent to the Board of Trade. A statutory declaration will also usually be required, but it is better not to proceed with this until the Board's requirements in the matter have been ascertained. No advertisement will be required.

These provisions do not affect any company to which the Indian Railways Act, 1894, as amended by any subsequent enactment, applies (c).

Directors who have been rendered liable for wrongfully paying dividends may recover the amounts paid to any shareholders who at the date of payment had full knowledge of all the facts (d); and company (ibid. s. 3 (5)). Interest may only be paid for such period as may be determined by the Secretary of State: such period may not extend beyond half a year after the completion and opening for traffic of the railway for the construction of which the capital on which interest is paid was issued (ibid. s. 3 (1)), but interest may be paid subject to like restrictions on capital issued for any extension (ibid. s. 4). If a company has power to make such payments it must be mentioned on every share certificate, and on every prospectus, advertisement, or other document inviting subscriptions for shares (ibid. s. 5). Interest will not accrue in favour of any shareholder while he is in arrear with calls on any of his shares (s. 3 (6)); the payment of such interest is not a reduction of capital (ibid. s. 3 (7)).

(b) Under the Indian Railways Act, 1894, the accounts must show the amounts on which and the rate at which interest is paid (s. 6), and if the borrowing powers of the company or its directors are limited to an amount bearing any proportion to the company's capital, then the amount of capital applied or to be applied in payment of interest will for the purpose of any borrowing be deducted from capital (ibid. s. 7). The Act was originally to come to an end in 1905, but its operation was extended for a year by the Expiring Laws Continuance Act, 1905, and now the limit has been altogether swept away by the Indian Railways Amendment Act, 1906.

no such shareholder can, at all events unless he has first repaid such dividend, bring an action to recover the amounts so paid for the company either in his own name or suing on behalf of himself and all other shareholders of the company (e). But shareholders and even directors (f) who have received such dividends without full knowledge of the facts are not liable to repay the dividends they have received (g).

All directors of a company who knowingly take part in the payment of an improper dividend are jointly and severally liable to make good the amounts paid away with interest at 5 per cent. (h), and where such amounts have been recovered in misfeasance proceedings under section 215 of the Act, they may not set off any amounts due to them from the company against such payments (i), nor may they deduct income tax from the 5 per cent. so to be paid, as it is in the nature of damages (k). In the absence of fraud a director can plead the Statute of Limitations to such a claim (k). With regard to interim dividends, the directors may declare these without having as full a knowledge of the facts as would be required in the case of a final dividend, for they are necessarily more dependent on estimates (l). Even after an interim dividend has been declared and the money to pay it set aside, the directors may decide to make no payment (m).

ALTERATIONS OF CAPITAL.

With regard to the various alterations of capital sanctioned by the Act, there is first of all a power to reduce capital which is dealt with by sections 46 to 56, both inclusive of the Act, and a power to reorganize capital dealt with by section 45 of the Act; both of these powers are discussed under the heading of Petitions.

A company limited by shares, if so authorized by its articles, may alter its memorandum as follows; that is to say, it may—

(a) increase its share capital by the issue of new shares of such amount as it thinks expedient;

(b) consolidate and divide all or any of its share capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares (n);

(c) convert all or any of its paid-up shares into stock, and reconvert that stock into paid-up shares of any denomination;

(d) subdivide its shares, or any of them, into shares of smaller amount than is fixed by the memorandum, so, however, that in the subdivision the proportion between the amount paid and the amount, if any, unpaid on each reduced share must be the same as it was in the case of the share from which the reduced share is derived (nn);

(e) cancel shares which, at the date of the passing of the resolution in that behalf, have not been taken or agreed to be taken by any person, and diminish the amount of its share capital by the amount of the shares so cancelled (nnn).

The powers conferred by this section with respect to subdivision of shares must be exercised by special resolution (o), and every copy of the memorandum issued after the date of any alteration under the section must be in accordance with the alteration.

If a company makes default in complying with this provision it will be liable to a fine not exceeding one pound for each copy in respect of which default is made; and every director and manager of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits the default will be liable to the like penalty.

A cancellation of shares in pursuance of this section is not a reduction of share capital within the meaning of the Act (p).

If a company which has a share capital has consolidated and divided its share capital into shares of larger amount than its existing shares or converted any of its shares into stock or reconverted stock into shares, it must give notice to the Registrar of Joint Stock

(p) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 41. Companies of the consolidation, division, conversion or reconversion, specifying the shares consolidated, divided or converted, or the stock reconverted (q).

Where a company having a share capital, whether its shares have or have not been converted into stock, has increased its share capital beyond the registered capital, and where a company not having a share capital has increased the number of its members beyond the registered number, it must give to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, in the case of an increase of share capital, within fifteen days after the passing, or in the case of a special resolution the confirmation of the resolution authorizing the increase, and in the case of an increase of members within fifteen days after the increase was resolved on or took place, notice of the increase of capital or members (r), and the Registrar must record the increase.

If a company makes default in complying with the requirements of this section, it will be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day during which the default continues, and every director and manager of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits the default will be liable to the like penalty (s). It has been held that where the articles empowered the directors to increase the capital with the sanction of a general meeting, and such a meeting authorized the directors to increase the capital to a specified amount, duty was forthwith payable on such amount (t).

Companies limited by guarantee and registered on or after the 1st of January, 1901, may, where they have a share capital if so authorized by the articles, increase or reduce their share capital in the same manner and subject to the same conditions in and subject to which a company limited by shares may increase or reduce their share capital under the provisions of the Act (u).

these companies are, except on the points above mentioned, governed by very much the same rules as govern companies limited by shares, if they have a share capital. But there are a certain number of such companies which are formed without any share capital. These companies are useful in cases where there is no intention of the members getting any benefit, or at all events any pecuniary benefit, out of the company in their character of members. They are therefore frequently found in the case of charities, mutual insurance companies, and clubs, social and otherwise. As has already been stated, the articles must provide, for stamp purposes, what the number of members is to be.

They need usually not provide for the division of profits or the assets on a winding-up—in the case of companies entitled to omit the word "limited" under section 20 of the Act there can be no distribution of profits—and the Board of Trade will usually not allow a company which proposes to distribute its assets on a winding-up among its members to dispense with the use of the word "limited" (x).

The liability in these cases of the members in respect of their guarantee would appear only to arise on the company going into winding-up (y), unless there is some special provision to the contrary. It is therefore usual for the articles to contain provisions enabling the company to receive or demand subscriptions from their members or others so as to enable the objects of the company to be carried out, while the company is a going concern (z).

An example of such provisions will be found in the case of a mutual insurance company below, and these provisions may, without much difficulty, be varied to meet the cases of other companies, which do not have a share capital.

In mutual insurance cases the question frequently arises of how far an undisclosed principal can sue or be sued when his agent has joined the association and effected the insurance in his own name.

In some cases he can be sued and can sue (a), in others he cannot (b), and it would seem that where he can do so he may under the articles find that for some purposes, at all events, he is a member (c).

The liability under provisions of this nature would seem, however, usually not to be the liability of a contributory or member (d). It would seem that the rights of members of this class of company to transfer their interests is absolute unless there is something in the articles enabling the directors to decline to register transfers or accept members or otherwise restricting the power of transfer (e).

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION.

There may, in the case of a company limited by shares, and there must in the case of a company limited by guarantee or unlimited, be registered with the memorandum, articles of association signed by the subscribers to the memorandum (f) and prescribing regulations for the company.

Articles of association may adopt all or any of the regulations contained in Table A in the First Schedule to the Act.

In the case of an unlimited company or a company limited by guarantee (g), the articles, if the company has a share capital, must state the amount of capital with which the company is to be registered, and, if the company has not a share capital, must state the number of members with which the company is to be registered, for the purpose of enabling the Registrar to determine the fees payable on registration (h).

In the case of a company limited by shares, if articles are not registered, or in so far as the articles do not exclude or modify the regulations in Table A in the First Schedule to the Act, those regulations will, so far as applicable, be the regulations of the company in the same manner and to the same extent as if they were contained in duly registered articles (i).

Articles must—

(a) be printed;

(b) be divided into paragraphs numbered consecutively;

(c) bear the same stamp as if they were contained in a deed; and

(d) be signed by each subscriber of the memorandum of association in the presence of at least one witness who must attest the signature, and that attestation will be sufficient in Scotland as well as in England and Ireland (k).

It will be borne in mind that there are now three different

Table A's (l), which apply to different classes: (1) Table A in the First Schedule to the Act of 1862, which applies to all companies registered under that Act without articles before the 1st of October, 1906; (2) Table A revised 1906 in the London Gazette of 31st July, 1906, which applies to all other companies registered under that Act without articles; (3) Table A in the First Schedule to the existing Act, which applies to all companies registered under the existing Act without articles.

There are certain powers which a company will not have unless they are conferred by its articles.

These are: (1) The powers conferred on a company limited by shares of altering its share capital, by section 41 of the Act; (2) the power to reduce capital conferred on companies limited by shares, by sections 46 et seq. of the Act; (3) the powers of increasing and reducing the share capital of companies limited by guarantee, and having a share capital conferred by section 56 of the Act; (4) the powers of companies limited by shares of issuing share or stock warrants in respect of fully paid-up shares or stock, conferred by sections 37 et seq. of the Act (m); (5) the power of having a foreign seal for use abroad conferred on companies whose objects require or comprise the transaction of business abroad, by section 79 of the Act; (6) the power of having a colonial register conferred on companies whose objects comprise the transaction of business in a colony (including British India and the Commonwealth of Australia), by sections 34 et seq. of the Act; (7) underwriting powers conferred by section 89 of the Act; (8) power to close the register of debentures under section 102 (1) of the Act; (9) the powers conferred by section 39 of the Act, i.e. to make arrangements for different amounts being paid on shares, to receive moneys in advance of calls, and to pay dividends in proportion to the amounts paid on shares.

Again, the minimum subscription must be contained in the memorandum or the articles (n), and a company may take power to pay interest on its capital under section 91, though this is more usually done by special resolution, without any power in the articles (nn). Again, unless the articles otherwise provide, the assets of the company must, under section 186 of the Act, be distributed among the members according to their rights and interests in the company, and a company

(l) There is also Table B in the Schedule to the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856, which applies to companies formed under that Act. S. 286 (1) (b) and (c), of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, expressly keeps the tables under the repealed Acts on foot.

(m) The Registrar of Joint Stock Companies declines to register private companies with articles containing provisions as to share-warrants—presumably on the ground that once share warrants are issued it will be impossible to restrict the right to transfer the shares comprised therein.

(n) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 85.

(nn) Where the Indian Railways Act, 1894, applies (see ante, p. 80), the power must be conferred by the memorandum or by special resolution; see s. 3 (2) of that Act.

may, under section 182, provide for winding up on the happening of a given event, or on the expiration of a particular period, in which case an ordinary resolution of the company will suffice for the winding-up.

The articles of a private company must—

(a) Restrict the right to transfer shares.

(b) Limit the number of its members (exclusive of persons who are in the employment of the company) to fifty.

(c) Prohibit any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company (o).

With regard to the other matters in the articles, they usually contain a reminder to the company of the date when it can commence business. They deal with the issue of shares, with certificates, with the lien of the company on its shares and the enforcement of such lien, with calls on shares, and the transfer and transmission of such shares ; with the forfeiture of shares ; they usually contain a power to modify the rights of different classes of shareholders ; they always deal with meetings of the company ; with the votes of members ; with directors, their powers, qualification, tenure of office, remuneration, appointment and proceedings, with the use of the seal ; usually with borrowing ; with dividends, accounts audit, though the Act would be sufficient on this ; and with notices.

All these matters are dealt with under their different headings, and so need not be more fully referred to here.

Where an official quotation on the Stock Exchange is required, the articles of association must contain the following provisions : (1) That none of the funds of the company shall be employed in the purchase of or in loans upon the security of its own shares (p) ; (2) that directors must hold a share qualification ; (3) that the borrowing powers of the board are limited ; (4) that the non-forfeiture of dividends is secured (q) ; (5) that the common form of transfer shall be used ; (6) that all share and stock certificates shall be issued under the common seal of the company, and shall bear the signatures of one or more directors and the secretary (r) ; (7) that fully paid-up shares shall be free from all lien ; (8) that the interest of a director in any contract shall be disclosed before execution, and that such director shall not vote in respect thereof (s) ; (9) that the directors

(o) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 121. Where two or more persons hold one or more shares in a company jointly they will for the purposes of this section be treated as a single member ; and see ante, p. 9, as to private companies.

(p) This clause is inserted to prevent corners by contangos or otherwise.

(q) This rule will be sufficiently complied with, if the articles are silent on the question of forfeiting dividends.

(r) The usual article requiring the seal to be affixed in the presence of one or more directors, and the secretary or some other person appointed by the Board will be sufficient.

(s) The article may, in practice, allow of directors voting on guarantees or security for guarantees given by themselves, and also where there are subsidiary com-shall have power at any time and from time to time to appoint any other qualified person as a director either to fill a casual vacancy or as an addition to the Board, but so that the total number of directors shall not at any time exceed the maximum number fixed; but that any director so appointed shall hold office only until the next following ordinary general meeting of the company, and shall then be eligible for re-election; (10) that a printed copy of the report accompanied by the balance-sheet and statement of accounts shall at least seven days previous to the general meeting be delivered or sent by post to the registered address of every member, and that two copies of each of these documents shall at the same time be forwarded to the Secretary of the Share and Loan Department, The Stock Exchange, London; (11) that the charge for a new share certificate issued to replace one that has been worn out, lost, or destroyed, shall not exceed one shilling (ss).

In addition, the Stock Exchange authorities usually require (a) that a power to increase the capital of the company given by the articles shall be given to and exercisable by the company in general meeting; (b) that all directors, whether appointed for life or otherwise, shall be removable by an extraordinary or other resolution of the company in general meeting; (c) that there shall be an absolute right to have transfers of fully paid shares registered; (d) that there shall be no provision giving a resolution signed by all the shareholders the effect of a resolution of the company in general meeting; and (e) that there shall be no provision giving a resolution signed by the majority of the directors the effect of a resolution passed at a Board meeting.

The Stock Exchange authorities do not like a provision that a director who does not acquire his qualification shares within a certain period shall be deemed to have agreed to take them from the company—as, if the shares have gone to a premium, this may confer an advantage on such a director. Such a clause if it exists will, however, not usually be a fatal objection to a quotation being obtained.

Altered articles should, in the case of a company having an official quotation, be sent to the Secretary of the Share and Loan Department of the Stock Exchange. It is always advisable to let the Stock Exchange authorities have an opportunity of looking at the memorandum and articles before they are registered. Where an official quotation for a loan is sought it is important that a power to borrow should be inserted in the memorandum.

Subject to the provisions of the Act and to the conditions contained in its memorandum of association, a company may by special resolution alter or add to its articles, and any alteration so made will panies may allow them to vote on contracts, etc., with such subsidiary companies, although they may be members or directors of such companies.

(ss) Stock Exchange Rules, Appendix 36B, set out in the Appendix to this book. See pp. 1509 et seq.

be as valid as if originally contained in the articles, and be subject in like manner to alteration by special resolution (t).

Where there is a slip in articles of association, the Court will not rectify them, and they will have to be altered by special resolution in the ordinary way (u).

A company cannot contract itself out of this power of altering its articles—that is clearly established (x); but it is not quite so easy to say how far the power goes.

First of all with regard to the contract of membership. There the contract (y), being dependent on an alterable document, can be altered; and it will not matter that the alteration retrospectively affects existing rights, if there has been no sinister intention in the background, and the power has been exercised bonâ fide with the view of furthering the interests of the company as a whole, and not of benefiting one class of its members at the expense of its other members, and it would seem that the power of making retrospective alterations can in a proper case be so used as to relieve the company from duties which at the time of the alteration it is immediately liable to perform; but it can probably not be so exercised as to affect the validity or invalidity of what has been done in the past by the company (z). Thus a company can give itself a lien over fully paid shares for debts due to it, even though this will primarily affect one member who is indebted to it (a). If the articles only gave a company power to refuse transfers of shares over which it had a lien, it could probably refuse to register a transfer presented before the alteration (b). Again, if shareholders have the right to take a proportion of any increased capital, it would seem probable that this right could be taken away after the capital has actually been increased (c). Similarly, a right conferred by the articles only, for the holder of certain shares to nominate a director can be taken away, by an alteration of the articles (d).

(c) See James v. Buena Ventura Syndicate, [1896] 1 Ch. 456, and the remarks thereon in Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, [1900] 1 Ch. 656; it might be otherwise where the new shares had actually been offered to members.

(d) Punt v. Symons, [1903] 2 Ch. 506.

Where the articles confer certain rights on persons answering a particular description, a special resolution purporting to deprive one of those persons of such rights, but not purporting to alter the articles, will be simply invalid (e).

With regard to persons who depend on some contract made with reference to the existing articles, it may be doubted whether the company can be prevented by such persons from altering its articles, but it can be prevented from acting on the altered articles in such a manner as to deprive such persons of their contractual rights (f). Thus, where a person has a contract, outside the articles, that the profits of the company shall be distributed in a manner provided by the articles, he could probably get an injunction to restrain the company from distributing the profits in another way, but not an injunction to prevent the alteration of the articles (g).

The power of altering articles under the section extends in the case of an unlimited company formed and registered under the Joint Stock Companies Acts to altering any regulations relating to the amount of capital or its distribution in shares, even if such regulations are contained in the memorandum of association (h).

The memorandum and articles, when registered, bind the company and the members thereof to the same extent as if they respectively had been signed and sealed by each member, and contained covenants on the part of each member, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to observe all the provisions of the memorandum and of the articles, subject to the provisions of the Act.

All money payable by any member of the company under the memorandum or articles is a debt due from him to the company, and in England and Ireland is of the nature of a specialty debt (i).

(e) Imperial Hydropathic Co. v. Hampson (1882), 23 C. D. 1.

(f) This view depends on the view that the articles must be considered as giving powers to the company, see Pritchard's Case (1873), 8 Ch. 956, and that the company cannot so alter such powers as to affect any exercise of such powers already made. See too Punt v. Symons, [1903] 2 Ch. 506; Baily v. British Equitable Assurance, [1904] 1 Ch. 374; [1906] A. C. 35. See also Swabey v. Port Darwin (1889), 1 Meg. 385, where it was held directors could not be deprived of fees earned before the alteration.

(g) Baily v. British Equitable Assurance, [1904] 1 Ch. 374, reversed on another point, [1905] A. C. 35.

(h) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 13 (2). The expression Joint Stock Companies Acts means the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1856, the Joint Stock Companies Acts, 1856, 1857, the Joint Stock Banking Companies Act, 1857, and the Act to enable Joint Stock Banking Companies to be formed on the principle of limited liability or any one or more of those Acts as the case may require: but does not include the Act passed in the eighth year of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, c. 110, intituled, An Act for the Registration, Incorporation, and Regulation of Joint Stock Companies, ibid., s. 285.

(i) Ibid., s. 14.

The exact meaning of the first part of this section is even now perhaps not very easy to say. It would seem quite clear that neither the memorandum nor the articles, whatever their contents, constitute a contract in writing between the company and any person, even though that person be a signatory (k); nor, indeed, would they seem to constitute a contract of any sort between the company and any person, other than a member in his character of member. At the same time they would appear to create some sort of a contract between the company and its members and between the members inter se, though as between the members inter se, such contract is not always an enforceable one (l).

The real nature of such a contract would seem to be that it is a contract between the company and its members, and between its members, that the company shall have certain powers, and shall conduct its business in certain ways, and usually at all events persons dealing with the company, in relation to matters dealt with in the memorandum or articles will be taken to have dealt with the company on the footing of the provisions of the memorandum and articles (m).

Thus these documents will contain provisions as to shares and the rights conferred by them, and such provisions will define the nature of the shares in the company, and as the company will not have power to issue any other kinds of shares, a person taking shares will have with them the rights mentioned in the memorandum and articles (n), which will usually be mentioned in the certificate, which would appear to be his true contract of membership (o).

Again, directors will if they have acted be deemed to have done so on the terms of the articles, and on no other terms, and so their contract will be ascertained from the articles (p). Some difficulty on this point is caused by Eley v. Positive Government Assurance Co. (q). Why should not the solicitor in that case have said, as I am a member, I insist that the legal business of the company shall be conducted in manner provided by the articles, until they are altered the company has no power to have it conducted otherwise, and I am entitled to stand on the contract between myself in my character of member, and the other members. If he had taken this line his position would surely have differed little from that of the director in Imperial Hydropathic Hotel Co. v. Hampson (r). If this line had been taken it would have been very difficult for the Court to have decided the case, as it did, on the ground that any contract there was, was res inter alios acta. The answer to this question would seem to be that a solicitor, unlike a director, is a mere agent of the company, and that the company can consequently dispense with his services, when it pleases; but it cannot be said that this answer seems logically very sufficient.

Questions as to the construction of the memorandum and articles can be decided on originating summons under O. 54 A. R. 1 R. S. C.; but in one case (s) Buckley, J., declined to appoint a person to represent a class of shareholders under rule 2 of that order or under O. 16, R. 32 (b) R. S. C., unless a meeting of the class were first held to appoint a person to represent them.

THE COMPANIES (CONSOLIDATION) ACT, 1908.

Company Limited by Shares.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION OF LIMITED.

1. Table A in the First Schedule to the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, shall not apply to this Company.

2. In the construction of these Articles of Association the following expressions shall where the context admits have the following meanings :—

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number ; and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number ; words importing the masculine gender only shall include females ; and words importing persons shall include corporations.

The word "month" shall mean calendar month.

The expression "the Company" shall mean the above-mentioned Company.

The expressions "the directors" "the board" shall mean respectively the directors and the board of directors of the Company.

The expression "these presents" shall mean these articles of association.

The expression "colony" shall have the same meaning as in section 34 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

The expression "member" shall mean a member of the Company.

BUSINESS.

3. The Company shall not commence any business or exercise any borrowing powers unless it has obtained a certificate that it is entitled to commence business, but nothing herein contained shall prevent the simultaneous offer for subscription or allotment of any shares and debentures or the receipt of any money payable on application for debentures.

SHARES.

4. For the purposes of section 85 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, the minimum subscription upon which the directors may proceed to allotment is fixed at shares.

5. The amount payable on application on each share (a) offered to the public for subscription shall not be less than five per cent. of the nominal amount of the share.

6. Subject to the provisions of these presents the shares shall be under the control of the directors who may allot the same to such persons and on such terms and conditions as they in their absolute discretion shall think fit.

7. The Company may pay to any person a commission at a rate not exceeding per cent. or of an amount not exceeding such rate in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe whether absolutely or conditionally for any shares in the Company, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions whether absolute or conditional for any shares in the Company.

8. The Company may pay a reasonable sum for brokerage and may make any allotment on the terms that the person to whom such allotment is made shall have the right to call for further shares at such time or times and at such price or prices (not being less than par) as may be thought fit.

9. The funds of the Company shall not be applied in the purchase of or in loans upon the security of the Company's own shares.

CERTIFICATES.

10. Each member shall be entitled to a certificate under the common seal of the Company specifying the shares held by him and the amount paid up thereon. Provided that in the case of shares held jointly by several persons the Company shall not be bound to issue more than one certificate, and delivery of a certificate for shares to one of several joint holders shall be sufficient delivery to all.

11. Every certificate shall be complete and ready for delivery within two months after the allotment or the registration of a transfer of the shares therein referred to unless the conditions of issue of such shares otherwise provide.

12. If any certificate be worn out or damaged then the directors shall issue a fresh certificate on the certificate so worn out or damaged being delivered up to be cancelled, and if any such certificate be lost or destroyed then the directors shall issue a fresh certificate on such loss or destruction being proved to their satisfaction and upon a sufficient indemnity being given against any loss or damage which the Company may suffer by reason of the issue of such fresh certificate.

13. On the issue of any certificate the directors may demand a fee not exceeding one shilling.

(a) Where no immediate offer to the public is contemplated insert here the words "forming part of the first allotment of share capital payable in cash and on each share."

CALLS.

14. The directors may from time to time make such calls upon the members in respect of all moneys unpaid on their shares as they think fit provided that fourteen days' notice at least shall be given of each call and that no call on any share shall be for a greater amount than a quarter of the nominal value of such share and that no call shall be made within one month after the last preceding call was made. This article shall be without prejudice to the rights of any member in respect of any share which has been issued to him on special conditions as to payment by instalments or otherwise.

15. Subject to any special conditions on which any shares have been issued each member shall be liable to pay any call made on him and any instalment presently payable by him at the time and place appointed by the directors.

16. The joint holders of a share shall be jointly and severally liable to pay all calls or instalments in respect thereof.

17. A call shall be deemed to have been made at the time when the resolution of the directors authorising such call was passed.

18. If before or on the day appointed for payment of any call or instalment any member does not make such payment then he shall be liable to pay such call or instalment together with interest on the same at the rate of five pounds per cent. per annum from the day appointed for payment thereof to the time of actual payment, but the directors shall be at liberty to waive payment of such interest wholly or in part.

19. The directors may accept from any member who assents thereto the whole or a part of the amount remaining unpaid on any share held by him although no call has been made.

20. Upon any moneys paid in advance under the last preceding article and until the same would but for such advance become presently payable the directors may pay interest at such rate as the member paying such sum in advance and the directors may agree upon.

21. The directors may make arrangements on the issue of shares for a difference between the holders of such shares in the amount of calls or instalments to be paid and in the time of payment of such calls or instalments.

LIEN.

22. The Company shall have a first and paramount lien on every share not being a fully paid share for all moneys whether presently payable or not called or liable to be called or payable at a fixed time in respect of such share and when a share not being a fully paid share is registered in the name of a single person the Company shall also have a first and paramount lien on such share for all moneys presently payable by such person or his estate either alone or jointly with any other person to the Company and when a share not being a fully paid share is registered in the name of more persons than one the Company shall have a like lien thereon in respect of moneys so payable to the Company by all or any of the holders thereof or the estates of all or any of them either alone or jointly with any other person but the directors may at any time declare any share to be wholly or in part exempt from the provisions of this clause. The Company's lien if any on a share shall extend to all dividends payable thereon.

23. For the purpose of enforcing any such lien the Company shall at any time when any such debt or liability or any part thereof has become presently payable be entitled to sell any share subject to such lien but before any such sale the Company shall give the registered holder for the time being of such share or the person entitled by reason of his death or bankruptcy to the same notice in writing requiring him to pay all moneys which are presently payable and are so charged on such share such notice shall specify the amount of such moneys and shall state that the Company intends to exercise its power of sale in the event of such amount not being paid by a specified day (not earlier than the expiration of fourteen days from the day of such notice).

24. The purchaser of any share so sold shall be registered as the holder of such share and he shall hold the same subject to any charge in favour of the Company for moneys not presently payable at the date of sale but in the absence of any arrangement to the contrary free from all other charges.

25. No purchaser shall be bound or concerned to inquire into the application of the purchase money or the regularity of the sale but the remedy of any one injured by a sale wrongfully made in purported exercise of such power of sale shall be in damages against the Company only.

26. All moneys received on any such sale shall after payment of any prior incumbrance be applied firstly in payment of all costs of such sale and of any attempted sale and secondly in payment of all moneys charged on the shares by virtue of such lien and presently payable and subject to such payments the balance shall be paid to the person who was entitled to such shares at the date of such sale.

Forfeiture of Shares.

27. If any member fails to pay any call or any instalment on the day appointed for payment thereof the directors may at any time thereafter during such time as the call or instalment remains unpaid serve a notice on him or on the person entitled by reason of his death or bankruptcy to his shares requiring payment of such call or instalment together with interest and any expenses that may have accrued by reason of such non-payment.

28. The notice shall name a further day not earlier than the expiration of fourteen days from the day of such notice on or before which such call or instalment and all interest and expenses that may have accrued by reason of such non-payment are to be paid.

29. The notice shall also state that in the event of non-payment at or before the time appointed the shares in respect of which such call was made or such instalment was payable will be liable to be forfeited.

30. If the requisitions of any such notice as aforesaid are not complied with any share in respect of which such notice has been given may at any time thereafter before the payment required by the notice has been made be forfeited by a resolution of the directors to that effect.

31. Any share so forfeited shall be deemed to be the property of the Company and may be sold or otherwise disposed of in such manner as the directors think fit but at any time before a sale or disposition the forfeiture may be cancelled on such terms and conditions as the directors think fit.

32. Notwithstanding any forfeiture any member whose shares have been forfeited shall be liable to pay to the Company all calls instalments interest and expenses presently payable in respect of the shares forfeited at the time of forfeiture.

33. A statutory declaration in writing that the declarant is a director of the Company and that a share in the Company has been duly forfeited on a date stated in the declaration shall be conclusive evidence of the facts therein stated as against all persons claiming to be entitled to the share and such declaration and the receipt of the Company for the price if any given for the share on the sale or disposition thereof shall constitute a good title to such share; and a certificate of proprietorship shall be delivered to a purchaser and his name shall be entered on the register of members and thereupon he shall be deemed the holder of such share discharged from all calls or instalments or other sums due prior to such purchase, and he shall not be bound to see to the application of the purchase money nor shall his title to such share be affected by any irregularity in the proceedings in reference to such forfeiture sale or disposition.

SURRENDER OF SHARES.

34. The directors may accept a surrender of shares where they are in a position to forfeit such shares and in any other case where a surrender of shares is allowed by law.

TRANSFERS AND TRANSMISSION.

35. The instrument of transfer of any share in the Company shall be executed by the transferor and the transferee; and the transferor shall be deemed to remain a holder of such share until the name of the transferee is entered in the register in respect thereof. On every transfer the directors may demand a fee not exceeding two shillings and sixpence.

36. Shares in the Company shall be transferred by transfers in the usual common form or in the following form:—

I, A. B. of in consideration of the sum of pounds paid to me by C. D. of do hereby transfer to the said C. D. the share [or shares] numbered standing in my name in the books of the Company Limited to hold unto the said C. D. his executors administrators and assigns subject to the several conditions on which I held the same at the time of the execution hereof; and I the said C. D. do hereby agree to take the said share [or shares] subject to the same conditions, As witness our hands the day of 19 .

37. The directors may decline to register any transfer of any shares which are not fully paid up to any person of whom they do not approve and any transfer of any shares in respect of which the Company has a lien.

38. The transfer books shall be closed during the fourteen days immediately preceding the ordinary meeting in each year.

39. The executors or administrators of a deceased sole holder shall be the only persons recognised by the Company as having any title to his shares and in the case of shares registered in the names of two or more holders the survivors or survivor shall be the only persons recognised by the Company as having any title to the shares.

40. The executor or administrator of a deceased member and any person who has become entitled to any shares in consequence of the bankruptcy of any member may either transfer the shares of such deceased or bankrupt member or may be registered as a member in respect of such shares upon such evidence being produced as may from time to time be required by the directors but the directors shall in either case have the same right to refuse registration as they would have had in the case of a transfer of such shares by the deceased or bankrupt person before his death or bankruptcy.

41. A person becoming entitled to shares by reason of the death or bankruptcy of the holder shall until he transfers or is registered as a member in respect of such shares be entitled to the same right to participate in the dividends and profits of the Company and in the assets on a winding-up or reduction of capital to which he would be entitled if he were the registered holder of such shares but except where otherwise herein provided he shall not without being registered as a member in respect of such shares be entitled in respect of them to receive any notice or to exercise or enjoy any right or privilege conferred by membership.

Modification of Class Rights.

42. Where the capital of the Company is divided into more than one class of shares the rights of the holders of any class of shares may be modified with the consent in writing of the holders of three-fourths of the issued shares of that class and every modification so sanctioned shall bind all the shareholders of that class.

Subdivision and Consolidation of Shares.

43. The Company may by special resolution subdivide its shares or any of them into shares of smaller amount than is fixed by its memorandum of association, provided that in the subdivision the proportion between the amount which is paid and the amount (if any) which is unpaid on each reduced share shall be the same as it was in the case of the share from which the reduced share is derived.

44. The directors may with the sanction of the Company previously given in general meeting consolidate and divide all or any of its share capital into shares of a larger amount than its existing shares.

45. In the event of part only of the capital of the Company being consolidated or subdivided a holder of consolidated or subdivided shares shall at every meeting of the Company have one vote for every entire share in the original capital of the Company which the nominal value of his holding represents.

CONVERSION OF SHARES INTO STOCKS AND RECONVERSION.

46. The directors may with the sanction of the Company previously given in general meeting convert any paid up shares into stock.

47. When any shares have been converted into stock the several holders of such stock may thenceforth transfer their respective interests or any part of such interests in the same manner and subject to the same regulations as and subject to which the shares from which the stock arose might previously to conversion have been transferred or as near thereto as circumstances admit provided always that the directors may from time to time provide that no transfer of stock below a minimum to be fixed by them from time to time shall be made and restrict or forbid transfers of fractions of that minimum but so that such minimum amount shall not be greater than the nominal amount of the shares from which such stock arose.

48. The holders of stock shall according to the amount of stock held by them have the same rights privileges and advantages as regards dividends voting at meetings and other matters as if they held the shares from which the stock arose but so that no right of membership in relation to meetings of the Company shall be conferred by any such aliquot part of stock as would not if existing in the shares from which the stock arose have conferred such rights.

49. Where the Company has converted any of its shares into stock then the directors may with the sanction of the Company previously given in general meeting reconvert such stock into paid up shares of any denomination. Such reconverted shares shall confer the same rights privileges and advantages as the stock from which they were reconverted.

INCREASE OF CAPITAL.

50. The directors may with the sanction of the Company previously given in general meeting increase its capital by the issue of new shares, such aggregate increase to be of such amount and to be divided into shares of such respective amounts as the Company in such general meeting directs or if no direction is given as the directors think expedient and the Company may in such general meeting direct that such new shares or any of them may have such preference or priority over the then existing shares of the Company and such rights and privileges different to those of such existing shares as they may think expedient.

51. Subject to any direction to the contrary that may be given by the meeting that sanctions the increase of capital all new shares shall be offered to the members in proportion as nearly as may be to the existing shares held by them; and such offer shall be made by notice specifying the number of shares to which the member is entitled and limiting a time within which the offer if not accepted will be deemed to be declined, and after the expiration of such time or on the receipt of an intimation from the member to whom such notice is given that he declines to accept the shares offered the directors may dispose of the same in such manner as they think most beneficial to the Company. The directors may likewise so dispose of any new shares which by reason of the ratio which the new shares bear to shares held by persons entitled to an offer of new shares cannot in the opinion of the directors be conveniently offered under this article. For the purposes of this article a person entitled to shares by reason of the death or bankruptcy of any member shall be considered a member.

52. Subject to any direction to the contrary that may be given by the general meeting that sanctions the increase of capital any capital raised by the creation of new shares shall be considered as part of the original capital of the Company and shall be subject to the same provisions with reference to the payment of calls and the forfeiture of shares and otherwise as if it had been part of such capital.

Reduction of Capital.

53. The Company may by special resolution reduce its capital in any manner and with and subject to any incident and consent required by law.

54. The directors may with the sanction of the Company previously given in general meeting cancel any shares which at the date of such resolution have not been taken or agreed to be taken by any person and diminish the amount of the share capital of the Company by the amount of the shares so cancelled.

Share and Stock Warrants.

55. The directors may with the sanction of the Company previously given in general meetings with respect to any share which is fully paid up or with respect to stock issue under their common seal a warrant stating that the bearer of the warrant is entitled to the shares or stock therein specified and may provide by coupons or otherwise for the payment of the future dividends on the shares or stock included in such warrant (hereinafter referred to as a share warrant). No such share warrant shall be issued until the directors have received a request in writing from the registered holder of the shares or stock together with the certificate for the same and the amount of stamp duty on the warrant and such fee as the directors may from time to time require.

56. A share warrant shall entitle the bearer of such warrant to the shares or stock specified in it and such shares or stock may be transferred by the delivery of such share warrant.

57. The bearer of a share warrant shall on surrendering such warrant for cancellation and on payment of such fee as the directors shall from time to time prescribe be entitled to have his name entered as a member on the register of members in respect of the shares or stock specified in such share warrant.

58. Except for the purpose of participating in the dividends and profits of the Company and as hereinafter provided the bearer of a share warrant shall not be deemed a member of the Company in respect of the shares or stock specified in such warrant.

59. The bearer of a share warrant may deposit such warrant at the registered office of the Company and on his making such deposit and giving his name and address there shall be delivered to him a certificate stating his name and address and the number of shares or the amount of stock represented by the warrant so deposited by him. Until such certificate is returned to the Company the person named therein shall be deemed to be a member for all purposes in respect of the shares or stock specified in such certificate except that he shall not in respect of such shares or stock be qualified for being a director of the Company and the address mentioned in such certificate shall be deemed to be his registered address. The warrant in respect of which such certificate is given shall be retained by the Company until such certificate is delivered up to it unless the directors are satisfied that such certificate has been lost or destroyed.

60. The directors may from time to time make rules as to the terms on which a new share warrant may be issued in cases of defacement wearing out loss or destruction.

61. Whenever there are any share warrants of the Company outstanding and unsurrendered the Company shall cause every dividend to be advertised in the Times within one month after it has been declared.

GENERAL MEETINGS.

62. The statutory general meeting of members of the Company shall be held within a period of not less than one month nor more than three months from the date at which the Company is entitled to commence business.

63. Subsequent general meetings shall be held once at least in each calendar year at such time and place as may be prescribed by the directors but so that no such meeting shall be held at an interval of more than fifteen months from the last preceding general meeting. Such meetings shall be called ordinary meetings.

64. Every general meeting of the Company other than the statutory meeting and an ordinary meeting shall be called an extraordinary meeting.

65. The directors may whenever they think fit and shall on the requisition of the holders of not less than one-tenth of the issued capital of the Company upon which all calls or other sums then due have been paid forthwith proceed to convene an extraordinary meeting.

66. The requisition must state the objects of the meeting and must be signed by the requisitionists and deposited at the office of the Company and may consist of several documents in like form each signed by one or more requisitionists.

67. If the directors do not proceed to cause a meeting to be held within twenty-one days from the date of the requisition being so deposited the requisitionists or a majority of them in value may themselves convene the meeting but any meeting so convened shall not be held after three months from the date of such deposit.

68. If at any such meeting a resolution requiring confirmation at another meeting is passed the directors shall forthwith convene a further extraordinary meeting for the purpose of considering the resolution and if thought fit of confirming it as a special resolution and if the directors do not convene the meeting within seven days from the passing of the first resolution the requisitionists or a majority of them in value may themselves convene the meeting.

69. Any meeting convened by requisitionists as aforesaid shall be convened in the same manner as nearly as possible as that in which meetings are to be convened by directors.

70. Seven days' notice at the least specifying the place the day and the hour of the meeting and in case of special business the general nature of such business shall be given to the members in manner hereinafter mentioned or in such other manner if any as may be prescribed by the Company in general meeting; but the accidental omission to give any such notice to any member shall not invalidate the proceedings at any meeting.

71. In the case of a special resolution the notice convening the two meetings may be given at one and the same time and the second meeting shall be deemed to have been properly convened notwithstanding the fact that such notice states that it will only be held in the event of the resolution proposed at the first meeting having been passed by the requisite majority.

72. All business shall be deemed special that is transacted at an extraordinary meeting and all that is transacted at an ordinary meeting with the exception of sanctioning a dividend and the consideration of the accounts balance sheets and ordinary reports of directors.

PROCEEDINGS AT GENERAL MEETINGS.

73. Except as hereinafter provided no business shall be transacted at any general meeting except the declaration of a dividend unless a quorum of members is present at the time when the meeting proceeds to business.

74. At any general meeting a quorum shall consist of three members personally present and entitled to vote.

75. If within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting a quorum is not present the meeting if convened on the requisition of members shall be dissolved in any other case it shall stand adjourned to the same day in the next week at the same time and place and if at such adjourned meeting a quorum is not present within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting any two or more members present and entitled to vote shall be a quorum.

76. The chairman of the board of directors shall preside as chairman at every meeting of the Company; but if at any time there is no such chairman or he is not present within fifteen minutes after the time appointed for holding the meeting or if he is unwilling to act the members present shall choose one of the directors who is present and willing to act to be chairman; but if there be no such director then the members present shall choose some one of their own number to be chairman.

77. The chairman may with the consent of the meeting adjourn any meeting from time to time and from place to place but no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which the adjournment took place.

78. At any general meeting a resolution put to the vote of the meeting shall be decided by a show of hands of persons present and entitled to vote unless a poll is demanded by at least two persons present and entitled to vote and unless a poll is so demanded a declaration of the chairman that such resolution has been carried or carried by a particular majority or lost shall be deemed to be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against such resolution.

79. If a poll is demanded on any resolution by the requisite number of persons it shall be taken in such manner as the chairman directs and the result of such poll shall be deemed to be the resolution of the Company in general meeting. In the case of an equality of votes whether on a show of hands or at a poll at any general meeting of the Company the chairman shall be entitled to a casting vote in addition to any vote or votes to which he is otherwise entitled.

80. A poll demanded on the election of a chairman or on a question of the adjournment of a meeting shall be taken forthwith. A poll demanded on any other question shall be taken at such time as the chairman of the meeting directs.

VOTES.

81. Every member shall have one vote for each share held by him.

82. If any member is an infant or a lunatic or of unsound mind he may vote by his guardian committee curator bonis or other legal curator.

83. If a Company is a member it may vote by any person authorised by resolution of its directors to act as its representative at any meeting and such representative shall be entitled on behalf of such Company to exercise the same functions as if he were a member.

84. If two or more persons are jointly entitled to any share the person whose name stands first in the register of members as one of the holders of such share and no other shall be entitled to vote in respect of the same.

85. No member shall be entitled to vote at any meeting of the Company unless all calls or other sums presently payable by him in respect of his shares in the Company have been paid and no member shall be entitled to vote in respect of any share that he has acquired by transfer at any meeting of the Company held after the expiration of three months from the registration of the Company unless he has been registered as the holder of the share in respect of which he claims to vote for at least three months previously to the time of holding the meeting at which he proposes to vote.

86. On a poll votes may be given either personally or by proxy.

87. No person shall act as a proxy unless he is apart from any proxy he holds entitled to be present and vote at the meeting at which he acts as a proxy.

88. Every proxy shall be in writing under the hand of the appointor and shall be deposited at the registered office of the Company not less than two clear days before the day appointed for holding the meeting or adjourned meeting at which the person named in such proxy proposes to vote and in default the proxy shall not be treated as valid.

89. Any instrument appointing a proxy shall be in the following form or as near thereto as circumstances will admit :—

THE COMPANY LIMITED.

I of in the county of being a member of the above-mentioned Company and entitled to votes hereby appoint of or failing him of as my proxy to vote for me and on my behalf at the (ordinary or extraordinary as the case may be) general meeting of the Company to be held on the day of 19 and at any adjournment thereof. Dated this day of 19

DIRECTORS.

90. The number of directors shall not be less than or more than but in the event of any casual vacancy occurring and reducing the number of directors to below the aforesaid minimum the continuing directors or director may act for the purpose of filling up such vacancy or vacancies or of summoning a general meeting of the Company.

91. The first directors shall be appointed by the subscribers to the Memorandum of Association.

92. Until directors are appointed the subscribers to the memorandum of association shall have all the powers hereby conferred on directors.

93. The qualification of a director shall be the holding of shares of the nominal value of £ in the capital of the Company either as sole holder or as the one of several joint holders whose name stands first in the register of members [and any person who accepts the office of director and who is not already qualified shall unless he obtain his qualification within one month from the date of his appointment be deemed to have agreed to take his qualification shares from the Company and the Company shall allot the same accordingly] (a).

94. Each director shall receive by way of remuneration for his services a sum calculated at the rate of £ per annum.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF DIRECTORS.

95. The business of the Company shall be managed by the directors who may pay all expenses incurred in getting up and registering the Company and may exercise all such powers of the Company as are not by statute or by these articles required to be exercised by the Company in general meeting; but the exercise of all such powers shall be subject to and in accordance with the provisions of any statute in that behalf and of these presents and shall also be subject to and in accordance with any regulations or provisions made by the Company in general meeting, but no regulation made by the Company in general meeting shall invalidate any prior act of the directors which would have been valid if such regulation had not been made.

DISQUALIFICATION OF DIRECTORS.

96. The office of director shall be vacated :—

(1) If he becomes bankrupt or insolvent.

(2) If he becomes incapable of acting therein.

(3) If he ceases to hold his qualification shares or if he does not acquire his qualification shares within two months from the date of his appointment.

(4) If at any time subsequently to his election he accepts or continues to hold any office or place of profit under the Company other than that of managing director or manager or trustee of a trust deed for securing debentures.

(5) If he contracts with or is concerned or interested in or participates in the profits of any contract with the Company or participates in the profits of any work done for the Company without declaring his interest at the meeting of the directors at which such contract is determined upon or work ordered if his interest then exists or in any other case at the first meeting of the directors after the acquisition of his interest. Provided always that the office of director shall in no case be vacated by reason of his being a member of any company which has entered into contracts with or done any work for the Company.

(6) If he gives notice in writing to the Company resigning his directorship.

97. No director shall vote on any contract in which he is either directly or indirectly concerned or interested and if he does so vote his vote shall not be counted. Provided always that the directors or any of them may vote on any contract for indemnifying themselves or any of themselves against any loss they may suffer by reason of becoming or being sureties for the company.

ROTATION OF DIRECTORS.

98. At the first ordinary meeting the whole of the directors (other than the managing director) shall retire from office, and at the ordinary meeting in every subsequent year one-third of the directors (other than the managing director) or if their number is not a multiple of three then the number nearest to one-third shall retire from office.

99. The directors to retire in every year shall subject nevertheless as hereinafter provided be those directors (other than the managing director) who have been longest in office since their last election but as between persons who became directors on the same day those to retire shall unless they otherwise agree among themselves be determined by lot.

100. A retiring director shall be eligible for re-election.

101. The Company at the ordinary meeting at which any directors retire in manner aforesaid shall fill up the vacated offices by electing a like number of persons.

102. If at any meeting at which an election of directors ought to take place the places of the vacating directors are not filled up the vacating directors or such of them as have not had their places filled up shall continue in office until the ordinary meeting in the next year and so on from time to time until their places are filled up.

103. The Company may from time to time in general meeting increase or reduce the number of directors, but so that such number shall not be increased beyond the maximum number or reduced below the minimum number hereinbefore prescribed, and they may determine the order of rotation in which such increased or reduced number shall go out of office.

104. The Company may by extraordinary resolution remove any director before the expiration of his term of office and may by ordinary resolution appoint another person in his stead. The person so appointed shall hold office during such time as the director in whose place he is appointed would have held the same if he had not been removed.

105. The directors shall have power at any time to appoint any person a director either to fill a casual vacancy or as an addition to the Board but so that the total number of directors shall not be increased beyond the maximum number hereinbefore prescribed. Any director so appointed shall hold office only until the next ordinary meeting and shall then be eligible for re-election.

Proceedings of Directors.

106. The directors may meet together for the despatch of business, adjourn and otherwise regulate their meetings as they think fit and determine the quorum necessary for the transaction of business, questions arising at any meeting shall be decided by a majority of votes ; in case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote ; a director may at any time summon a meeting of directors.

107. The directors may elect a chairman of their meetings and determine the period for which he is to hold office but if no such chairman is elected or if at any meeting the chairman is not present at the time appointed for holding such meeting the directors shall choose some one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.

108. The directors may delegate any of their powers to committees consisting of such member or members of their body as they think fit ; any committee so formed shall, in the exercise of the powers so delegated conform to any regulations that may be imposed on them by the directors. Subject to any such regulations and to the provisions of these presents a committee may elect a chairman and otherwise regulate their meetings ; if no such chairman is elected or if he is not present at the time appointed for holding any meeting the members present shall choose one of their number to be chairman at such meeting.

109. A committee may meet and adjourn as they think proper. Questions arising at any meeting shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present ; and in case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote.

110. All acts done by any meeting of the directors or of a committee of directors or by any person acting as a director or as a managing director or as a manager shall notwithstanding that it be afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of any such director or person acting as aforesaid or that they or any of them were disqualified be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director or a managing director or a manager.

111. A resolution in writing signed by all the directors shall have the same effect as a resolution passed at a meeting of directors.

112. The directors shall have power to appoint one or more of their number to be managing director or manager for such term and upon such conditions as they see fit and they may delegate to such managing director or manager such of their powers as they in their absolute discretion shall think fit.

113. Any such managing director or manager shall receive for his services such remuneration whether by way of salary or commission or participation in profits or partly in one way and partly in another as the directors may think fit. A managing director or manager shall not be liable to retire by rotation while he continues to be a managing director or manager, but if in any other way he ceases to be a director his office of managing director or manager shall ipso facto be vacated.

114. The directors may employ any one or more of their number to do any special business for the Company and may remunerate any person so employed and such remuneration may be either in addition to or in substitution for the remuneration to which any such director is entitled as director.

MORTGAGES AND CHARGES.

115. The amount for the time being remaining undischarged of moneys borrowed or raised by the directors for the purposes of the Company shall not exceed the amount for the time being of the issued capital of the Company without the sanction of the Company in general meeting.

116. Within two months after the allotment of any debenture or debenture stock and within two months after the registration of a transfer of the same the directors shall complete and have ready for delivery the debentures and the certificates of all debenture stock allotted or transferred unless the conditions of issue of the debentures or debenture stock otherwise provide.

117. The Company shall comply with the provisions of sections 93 100 and 101 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

118. Every register of holders of debentures of the Company may be closed for any periods not exceeding in the whole the maximum period allowed by law in any year. Subject as aforesaid every such register shall be open to the inspection of the registered holder of any such debentures and of any member; but the Company may in general meeting impose any reasonable restrictions so that at least two hours in each day when such register is open are appointed for inspection and every such holder may acquire a copy of such register or any part thereof on payment of sixpence for every one hundred words required to be copied.

119. The Company shall comply with the provisions of section 102 (2) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 as to supplying copies of trust deeds for securing issues of debentures.

120. Holders of debentures shall have the same right to receive and inspect the balance sheets of the Company and the reports of the auditors and other reports as are possessed by members of the Company.

MINUTES.

121. The directors shall cause minutes of all resolutions and proceedings of meetings of the Company and of the directors and of every committee of the directors to be duly entered in books to be from time to time provided for the purpose and such minutes shall be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which such resolution was passed or proceeding had or by the chairman of the next succeeding meeting. The minutes of every meeting of the directors or of a committee of the directors shall in addition state what directors were present at such meeting and at every such meeting each director present shall sign his name in a book to be kept for the purpose.

SEAL.

122. The powers conferred by section 79 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908 shall apply to this Company.

123. Every document bearing the common seal of the Company must be signed by at least two directors of the Company and countersigned by the secretary of the Company or some person duly authorised in that behalf by the directors.

COLONIAL REGISTER.

124. The Company may cause to be kept in any colony where it transacts business a branch register of members resident in such colony.

DIVIDENDS.

125. The directors may with the sanction of the Company in general meeting declare a dividend and the directors may from time to time pay such interim dividends as they consider to be justified by the profits of the Company.

126. Subject to the rights of members whose shares have been issued on special terms every dividend shall be paid to the members in proportion to the amount paid up on their shares.

127. No dividend shall be payable except out of the profits arising from the business of the Company.

128. The directors may before recommending any dividend set aside out of the profits of the Company such sum as they think proper as a reserve fund to meet contingencies or for equalising dividends or for repairing or maintaining works connected with the business of the Company or any part thereof or for any other purpose the directors think proper and the directors may invest the sum so set apart as a reserve fund upon such investments as they may select.

129. The directors may deduct from the dividends payable to any member all such sums of money as may be due from him to the Company on account of calls or otherwise.

130. Notice of any dividend that may have been declared shall be given to each member and all dividends may be paid by cheque sent through the post to the registered address of the member entitled thereto or to such other address as such member may in writing request. In the case of joint holders of shares the person who is named first in the register of members shall be deemed to be the member entitled to all dividends.

131. Where the Company has earned profits available for dividend hereunder but it is not convenient to pay a dividend in cash the Company may pay a dividend by issuing debentures or fully paid shares to or by distributing any part of its assets in specie among the members entitled to such dividend provided always that nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorise the issue of any share at a discount.

132. No dividend shall bear interest against the Company but the Company shall not be entitled to forfeit any dividends because they have not been claimed.

ACCOUNTS.

133. The directors shall cause true accounts to be kept of the sums of moneys received and expended by the Company and the matter in respect of which such receipt and expenditure takes place and of the assets and liabilities of the Company.

134. The books of account shall be kept at the registered office of the Company and shall be open to the inspection of any director but except with the sanction of the directors no other person shall be entitled to inspect any book or document or account of the Company unless he is authorised so to do by statute or by these articles or by a resolution of the Company in general meeting.

135. Once at least in every year the directors shall lay before the Company in general meeting a statement of the income and expenditure for the past year made up to a date not more than six months before such meeting (t).

136. The statement so made shall show arranged under the most convenient heads the amount of gross income distinguishing the several sources from which it has been derived and the amount of gross expenditure distinguishing the expense of establishment salaries and other like matters ; every item of expenditure fairly chargeable against the year's income shall be brought into account so that a just balance of profit and loss may be laid before the meeting and in cases where any item of expenditure which may in fairness be distributed over several years has been incurred in any one year the whole amount of such item shall be stated with the addition of the reasons why only a portion of such expenditure is charged against the income of the year.

137. A balance-sheet shall be made out in every year and laid before the Company in general meeting made up to a date not more than six months before such meeting. The balance-sheet shall be accompanied by a report of the directors as to the state of the Company's affairs and the dividends which with the sanction of the Company in general meeting the directors propose to declare and of all interim dividends paid since the last ordinary meeting and of the amounts carried to reserve.

138. Every such balance-sheet shall give a summary of the capital and liabilities and assets of the Company (u) and shall give such particulars as will disclose the general nature of such liabilities and assets and how the value of the fixed assets have been arrived at and shall state the total amount of the sums paid by way of commission in respect of any shares or debentures or allowed by way of discount in respect of any debentures or so much thereof as has not been written off until the whole amount thereof has been written off and every such balance-sheet shall be signed on behalf of the Board by two directors or if there is only one director by such director.

(t) This form of Article, coupled with Article 125, seems not to be within the reasoning in Nicholson v. Rhodesia Trading Co., [1897] 1 Ch. 434, and a company with such articles may therefore sanction a dividend at a meeting other than an ordinary general meeting.

(u) Add "showing the share capital on which, and the rate at which interest has been paid out of capital during the period to which such accounts relate," in cases where any such payment is likely to be made under the provisions of s. 91 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, or of the Indian Railways Act, 1894, as amended by the Indian Railways Amendment Act, 1906.

139. The Company shall comply with the provisions of section 26 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908.

140. A printed copy of every such balance-sheet and report and statement of income and expenditure shall seven days previously to the meeting be served on every member in manner in which notices are hereinafter directed to be served (x).

Auditors.

141. The Company shall at each ordinary meeting appoint an auditor or auditors to hold office until the next ordinary meeting.

142. A director or officer of the Company shall not be capable of being appointed an auditor of the Company.

143. A retiring auditor shall be re-eligible but no other person shall be capable of being appointed auditor at an ordinary meeting unless notice of an intention to nominate that person to the office of auditor has been given by a member to the Company not less than fourteen days before the ordinary meeting and the Company shall send a copy of any such notice to the retiring auditor and shall give notice thereof to the members either by advertisement or in any other mode in which notices are by these presents authorised to be given not less than seven days before the ordinary meeting provided always that if after a notice of the intention to nominate an auditor has been so given an ordinary meeting is called for a date fourteen days or less after that notice has been given the notice though not given in the time required by this provision shall be deemed to have been properly given for the purposes thereof and the notice to be sent or given by the Company may instead of being sent or given within the time required by this provision be sent or given at the same time as the notice of the ordinary meeting.

144. The first auditors of the Company may be appointed by the directors before the statutory meeting and if so appointed shall hold office until the first ordinary meeting unless previously removed by a resolution of the shareholders in general meeting in which case the shareholders at such meeting may appoint auditors to hold office until the first ordinary meeting. In the event of the directors not having appointed auditors before the statutory meeting they shall within three months after such statutory meeting convene an extraordinary meeting of the Company for the purpose of appointing auditors to hold office until the first ordinary meeting of the Company.

145. The directors may fill any casual vacancy in the office of auditor but while any such vacancy continues the surviving or continuing auditor or auditors if any may act.

146. The remuneration of the auditors of the Company shall be fixed by the Company in general meeting except that the remuneration of any auditors appointed before the statutory meeting or to fill any casual vacancy may be fixed by the directors.

(x) Where an official quotation on the Stock Exchange is desired, add "and two copies of each of the said documents shall at the same time be forwarded to the secretary of the Share and Loan Department, the Stock Exchange, London."

147. Every auditor of the company shall have a right of access at all times to the books and accounts and vouchers of the Company and shall be entitled to require from the directors and officers of the Company such information and explanations as may be necessary for the performance of his duties as auditor.

148. The auditors shall make a report to the shareholders on the accounts examined by them and on every balance sheet laid before the Company in general meeting during their tenure of office and in every such report shall state whether or not they have obtained all the information and explanations they have required and whether in their opinion the balance-sheet referred to in the report is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the Company's affairs according to the best of their information and the explanations given to them and as shown by the books of the Company.

149. The balance-sheet (signed by two directors or one director as above-mentioned) shall have the auditors' report attached to it or there shall be inserted at the foot of the balance-sheet a reference to the report and the report shall be read before the Company in general meeting and shall be open to inspection by any member. Any member shall be entitled to be furnished with a copy of the balance-sheet and auditors' report at a charge not exceeding sixpence for every hundred words.

NOTICES.

150. Any notice may be served by the Company upon any member either personally or by sending it through the post in a prepaid letter addressed to such member at his registered address or (if he has no registered address within the United Kingdom) at the place if any within the United Kingdom supplied by him to the Company for the giving of notices to him.

151. All notices directed to be given to the members shall with respect to any share to which persons are jointly entitled be given to whichever of such persons is named first in the register of members and notice so given shall be sufficient notice to all the holders of such share.

152. Any notice may be given to the persons entitled on the death or bankruptcy of a member by sending it through the post in a prepaid letter addressed to them by name or by the title of the representatives of the deceased or trustee of the bankrupt or by any like description at the address if any in the United Kingdom supplied by the persons who have satisfied the Company that they are so entitled. If there are no persons who are or no persons who have satisfied the Company that they are so entitled or if no such address has been supplied them and in either of such cases any notice in respect of the shares of any deceased or bankrupt member may be given in any manner in which the same might have been given if the death or bankruptcy had not occurred.

153. Any notice if served by post shall be deemed to have been served within twenty-four hours from the time when the letter containing the same was put into the post office; and in proving such service it shall be sufficient to prove that such letter was properly addressed and put into the post office.

WINDING-UP.

154. On a winding-up if there are any assets remaining after satisfaction of all the debts and liabilities of the Company and after payment of the costs of liquidation and repayment to the shareholders of the amounts respectively paid by them on their shares then the assets so remaining shall be divided among the shareholders in proportion to the amounts paid or which ought to have been paid by them at the commencement of the winding-up in respect of their shares; but if after payment of the said debts and liabilities and costs there shall not remain sufficient assets to repay to the shareholders the amounts respectively paid by them on their shares then the loss shall be borne by the shareholders in proportion to the amounts paid by them or which ought to have been paid by them at the commencement of the winding-up in respect of their shares. This article is without prejudice to the rights of persons whose shares are Issued on special terms.

(2) The

(3) The doing all such other lawful things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects.

Provided that the Association shall not support with its funds or endeavour to impose on or procure to be observed by its members or others any regulation, restriction or condition which if an object of the Association would make it a Trade Union.

Provided also that in case the Association shall take or hold any property subject to the jurisdiction of the Charity Commissioners or Board of Education for England and Wales, the Association shall not sell, mortgage, charge, or lease the same without such authority, approval or consent as may be required by law, and as regards any such property the Managers or Trustees of the Association shall be chargeable for such property as may come into their hands, and shall be answerable and accountable for their own acts, receipts, neglects, and defaults, and for the due administration of such property in the same manner and to the same extent as they would as such Managers or Trustees have been if no incorporation had been effected, and the incorporation of the Association shall not diminish or impair any control or authority exercisable by the Chancery Division, the Charity Commissioners or the Board of Education over such Managers or Trustees, but they shall, as regards any such property, be subject jointly and separately to such control or Authority as if the Association were not incorporated. In case the Association shall take or hold any property which may be subject to any trusts, the Association shall only deal with the same in such manner as allowed by law having regard to such trusts.

4. The income and property of the Association, whencesoever derived, shall be applied solely towards the promotion of the objects of the Association as set forth in this Memorandum of Association; and no portion thereof shall be paid or transferred directly or indirectly, by way of dividend, bonus, or otherwise howsoever by way of profit, to the members of the Association.

Provided that nothing herein shall prevent the payment, in good faith, of reasonable and proper remuneration to any officer or servant of the Association, or to any member of the Association, in return for any services actually rendered to the Association, nor prevent the payment of interest at a rate not exceeding five per cent. per annum on money lent or reasonable and proper rent for premises demised or let by any member to the Association; but so that no member of the Council of Management or Governing Body of the Association shall be appointed to any salaried office of the Association, or any office of the Association paid by fees, and that no remuneration or other benefit in money or moneys worth shall be given by the Association to any member of such Council or Governing Body except repayment of out-of-pocket expenses and interest at the rate aforesaid on money lent or reasonable and proper rent for premises demised or let to the Association; provided that the provision last aforesaid shall not apply to any payment to any Railway, Gas, Electric Lighting, Water, Cable, or Telephone Company of which a member of the Council of Management or Governing Body may be a member or any other Company in which such member shall not hold more than one-hundredth part of the capital, and such member shall not be bound to account for any share of profits he may receive in respect of any such payment.

5. The fourth paragraph of this Memorandum is a condition on which a licence is granted by the Board of Trade to the Association in pursuance of Section 20 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

6. The liability of the members is limited.

7. Every member of the Association undertakes to contribute to the assets of the Association, in the event of the same being wound up during the time that he is a member, or within one year afterwards, for payment of the debts and liabilities of the Association contracted before the time at which he ceases to be a member, and of the costs, charges, and expenses of winding up the same, and for the adjustment of the rights of the contributories amongst themselves, such amount as may be required not exceeding [pounds].

8. If upon the winding up or dissolution of the Association there remains, after the satisfaction of all its debts and liabilities, any property whatsoever, the same shall not be paid to or distributed among the members of the Association, but shall be given or transferred to some other institution or institutions, having objects similar to the objects of the Association, and which shall prohibit the distribution of its or their income and property amongst its or their members to an extent at least as great as is imposed on the Association under or by virtue of Clause 4 hereof, such institution or institutions to be determined by the members of the Association at or before the time of dissolution, or in default thereof by such Judge of the High Court of Justice as may have or acquire jurisdiction in the matter, and if and so far as effect cannot be given to the aforesaid provision then to some charitable object.

9. True accounts shall be kept of the sums of money received and expended by the Association, and the matter in respect of which such receipts and expenditure take place, and of the property, credits, and liabilities of the Association; and, subject to any reasonable restrictions as to the time and manner of inspecting the same that may be imposed in accordance with the regulations of the Association for the time being, shall be open to the inspection of the members. Once at least in every year the accounts of the Association shall be examined, and the correctness of the balance-sheet ascertained by one or more properly qualified Auditor or Auditors.

We, the several persons whose names and addresses are subscribed, are desirous of being formed into an Association in pursuance of this Memorandum of Association.

Or if the agreement has been entered into with a trustee on behalf of the intended company omit the words after the words "if thought fit," and add—

"to adopt and enter into an agreement in the terms of an agreement which has been made between the said A.B. of the one part and C.D. or a trustee on behalf of the intended company of the other part.

FORMS OF CAPITAL CLAUSES IN THE MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION WHERE THE CAPITAL IS DIVIDED INTO SEVERAL CLASSES OF SHARES (h).

The capital of the company is £100,000 divided into 50,000 Preference Shares of £1 each, and 50,000 Ordinary Shares of £1 each. The holders of the said preference shares shall be entitled to a dividend at the rate of five per cent. per annum on the amounts paid up on their shares. Such companies not formed for purpose of gain and having such objects as are set out in forms 26, 29 and 30 to obtain a licence to register without the word "limited" under s. 20 of the Act. See ante, pp. 56 et seq.

(g) The words in square brackets should be added where the business, etc., to be taken over is only one of several operations which the company is formed to undertake [e.g., in the case of a financial company].

(h) These forms may easily be varied so as to provide for founders or deferred shares, etc. (e.g., by giving shares of small nominal value the right to half of any fund available for dividend, either subject or not subject to a prior fixed dividend, and to half the surplus assets on a winding-up after payment of debts and costs of winding-up).

dividend to be cumulative and to take precedence and have priority over all dividends payable to the holders of the said ordinary shares or of any other shares which the company may at any time issue.

Where the rights conferred on the holders of different classes of shares are complicated it is best to have a separate clause setting out and defining such rights.

The rights following shall attach to the said preference shares.

(1) The right to a fixed cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the amounts paid up on such shares payable out of any profits which it may be determined to distribute among the members of the company and in priority to any dividend payable to the holders of the said ordinary shares or of any other shares which the company may at any time issue and in addition the right to have one fifth of any balance of any such profits which may remain after payment of the said dividend and after providing a sufficient sum to pay a fixed cumulative dividend at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum on the amounts for the time being paid up on the said ordinary shares and any other shares which the company may at any time issue. Such dividends to be distributed among the holders of the said preference shares in proportion to the amounts paid up on their shares.

(2) The right on a winding-up to have the amounts paid up thereon repaid [and if the assets of the company are more than sufficient for this purpose to have a further sum (hereinafter called the further sum) equal to the difference between the total amount paid by the company by way of dividend on the preference shares issued and outstanding at the date of the winding-up and the amount which would have been paid if the company had paid interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the amounts paid up in respect of such preference shares on such date from the respective dates when such amounts were respectively paid up to the date of the winding-up] (i) in priority to the return of any amount paid up on the ordinary shares of the company or on any other shares which the company may at any time issue and the right to have one-fifth of any surplus which may remain after repayment of all capital paid up at the commencement of the winding-up on all other shares of the company distributed among the holders of the said preference shares (k).

(3) [Any moneys available for paying the further sum (after repaying the amount paid up on the preference shares) shall be distributed among the preference shareholders in the proportions in which they would have received such moneys had the same been distributed as a dividend immediately before the commencement of the winding-up but save as aforesaid] all losses shall as between the preference shareholders be borne by and any assets remaining to be distributed among the preference shareholders after repayment of all capital on the other shares of the company shall be distributed among the preference shareholders in proportion to the amounts paid by them or which ought to have been paid by them at the commencement of the winding-up in respect of their shares.

7. The preference and special privileges hereby conferred on the holders of the said preference shares may be modified without the sanction of the court but save as aforesaid any such modification shall be effected in the same manner in all respects as though the company were proceeding to reorganise its capital under section 45 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (l).

(i) The part of this clause in square brackets is framed to meet Re W. T. Hall & Co., [1909] 1 Ch. 521.

(k) These rights should be incorporated, by a reference to them, in the articles of Association Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 186 (1), Birch v. Cropper (1889), 14 A. C. 525; see form, post, p. 136.

Provision making the liability of directors or managers or of the managing director unlimited—pursuant to section 60 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

The liability of every director [managers and managing director] shall be unlimited.

OTHER ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION.

AGREEMENT.

The directors shall forthwith on behalf of the company enter either with or without modification into an agreement made between A. B. of the one part and the company of the other part a draft whereof has already been prepared and which draft has for the purpose of identification been signed by X. Y. a solicitor of the Supreme Court. No objection shall be raised by reason of the fact that the said A. B. is a director of the company and is reselling to the company at a profit property recently acquired by him nor shall he be precluded from accepting such profit or be liable to account to the company in respect of the same [or notwithstanding anything hereinafter contained from voting as a director in respect of such contract or any modification thereof].

ALTERNATIVE FORM.

The directors shall forthwith on behalf of the company either with or without modification adopt and enter into an agreement in the terms of an agreement dated the day of 19 and made between A. B. of the one part and C. D. as trustee on behalf of the then intended company of the other part.

ADDITIONAL CLAUSES DEALING WITH DIFFERENT CLASSES OF SHARES WHERE THE MEMORANDUM OF ASSOCIATION IS SILENT ON THE POINT.

Without prejudice to any rights previously conferred on the holders of existing shares any share may be issued with such preferred deferred or other special rights or such restrictions whether in regard to dividend voting return of share capital or otherwise as the company may from time to time by special resolution [or as the directors may from time to time] determine.

(l) This clause appears to be good (Welsbach Incandescent Light Co., [1904] 1 Ch. 87), but any one advising preference shareholders should object to it, for it takes away from them the protection given by s. 45 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, namely the sanction of the court, a very necessary protection in view of the risk of a majority of the preference shareholders being larger holders of ordinary shares than they are of preference shares. A vote at a class meeting seems a right of property the same as any other vote, but of course where the sanction of the court is required the court will bear in mind the fact that certain numbers had ulterior objects to serve. Alabama, etc., Rail. Co., [1891] 1 Ch. 213; Wedgewood Coal and Iron Co. (1877), 6 C. D. 627. Section 45 of the Act is so badly drawn that it may be desirable to insert a clause showing in what way the rights are to be varied. For such clauses see Article 42, ante, p. 100, and the last form on p. 128.

ANOTHER ALTERNATIVE (NOT OF FREQUENT USE).

The original capital shall be divided into 500 preference shares and 500 ordinary shares.

The holders of the said preference shares shall have the following rights that is to say :—

(1) The right to a cumulative preferential dividend of 5 per cent. per annum on the amounts paid up on such shares payable out of any profits available for dividend in priority to any other dividend or any other shares in the original or any increased capital of the company.

(2) The right on a winding up to be repaid all capital paid up in respect of such shares at the commencement of the winding-up before any sum is repaid in respect of any other shares in the original or any increased capital of the company.

And such shares shall not confer any further or other rights to the profits and dividends of the company or to the assets on a winding-up.

ARTICLE TO BE SUBSTITUTED FOR ARTICLE 37 (ll).

TRANSFERS.

The directors may in their absolute discretion decline to register any transfer of any shares

Save as hereinafter provided no share in the company shall be transferred to any person who is not either a member at the date of the transfer notice hereinafter mentioned or a descendant or the wife or widow of a descendant of A. B. (m) or of C. D.

Any person who is desirous of transferring any share in the company to any person other than a member or other person mentioned in the preceding article must give the company notice of his intention to transfer. Such notice (herein referred to as the transfer notice) must state the price at which and the number of shares which the person giving the transfer notice is willing to transfer and shall be irrevocable without the consent of the company. The price to be named in such transfer notice shall not exceed the amount which has been paid up on such shares plus a sum bearing the same ratio to the total of the reserve fund or funds as shown by the last balance sheet of the company as the amount paid up on the shares proposed to be transferred bears to the total amount paid up on all the shares of the company together with interest on the total sum so ascertained at the rate of 5 per cent. from the time when a dividend was last declared by the company until the date of the transfer notice or for the six months prior to such date whichever shall be the shorter period.

The company shall on the receipt of a transfer notice forthwith give all members other than the member who has given the transfer notice notice of the fact that it has received the transfer notice and of the number of shares therein comprised and of the date when it was received and any such member or members may give to the company at any time before the expiration of twenty-eight days from the date when the transfer (ll) These forms are not suitable where an official quotation on the Stock Exchange is desired.

(m) A. B. and C. D. are not necessarily persons in the business, when it is sold to a company, frequently they are the fathers of such persons ; thus letting in a larger class of relatives, notice was received notice of his willingness to purchase all or any one or more of the shares referred to in the transfer notice. Such notice is hereinafter called a notice of acceptance and shall state the number of shares which the person giving the notice is willing to purchase.

The company shall on the expiration of the period during which notices of acceptance may be given forthwith notify the person who has given the transfer notice and the persons if any who have given notices of acceptance of the names of the members if any who have given notices of acceptance and of the number of the shares comprised in the transfer notice to which each such member is entitled and thereupon each of such members shall be bound to purchase such of the said shares as he is entitled to and subject as hereinafter provided the person giving the transfer notice shall be bound to sell and transfer the same at the purchase price hereinafter mentioned. The purchase price shall be the price mentioned in the transfer notice or if the intending purchaser shall so require by notice in writing given to the company at the same time as his notice of acceptance or within one week thereafter the value of the shares to be transferred such value to be determined (n) by arbitration under the Arbitration Act 1889 or any statutory modification thereof.

If no notice of acceptance shall be received within the period hereinbefore limited for the giving of the same or if the notices of acceptance received within the said period shall not include as many shares as the shares comprised in the transfer notice or if any member who has given a notice of acceptance shall fail to pay his purchase money within fourteen days after such notice has been given by the company or as the case may be after the value of the shares to be transferred has been determined in manner aforesaid then the intending transferror shall for a period of three months from the expiration of the said period of twenty-eight days or from the date of such default or failure as the case may be be entitled to transfer to any person whom he selects any shares mentioned in his transfer notice to which no member is entitled under these provisions or which by reason of any such failure or default he has failed to transfer and the directors shall be bound to register such transfer except in the case of a transfer of partly paid or unpaid shares which it is proposed to transfer to some person whom the directors do not consider a desirable member.

[The company may at any time give any member notice requiring him to transfer all or any of his shares at a named price to any named person in which case the person required to transfer shall be bound to transfer such shares at such price unless he shall within ten days after receipt of such notice require as he is hereby authorised to do, that the value of such shares shall be determined by arbitration in manner above provided in which case he shall be bound to transfer such shares at the price which is so ascertained to be their value.]

In the event of more than one member giving notices of acceptance in respect of any shares comprised in a transfer notice and such shares not being sufficient to supply all such members with all the shares mentioned in their notices of acceptance then the shares comprised in the transfer notice shall so far as possible be transferred to such members in proportion to their existing holdings of shares, but so that no member shall be entitled to a larger number of shares than the number mentioned in his notice of acceptance.

The directors may rectify the register and do all such other things as they may consider necessary for carrying out the foregoing provisions.

CLAUSE 41.—ALTERNATIVE FORM.

TRANSMISSION OF SHARES ON DEATH, ETC.

No person becoming entitled to any shares by reason of the death or bankruptcy of the holder of any shares shall until he transfers or is registered as a member in respect of such shares be entitled to participate in the dividends and profits of the company (o).

In case any person who shall become entitled to any shares by reason of the death or bankruptcy of any member shall not transfer such shares or apply to be registered as a member in respect of such shares for six months after the company shall have served on him a notice in writing requiring him so to do it shall be lawful for the directors to sell or to forfeit any shares which are at the expiration of such period still standing in the name of the deceased or bankrupt person and in such case the proceeds of sale of any share so sold and every share so forfeited shall be deemed to be the property of the company and in the case of a forfeited share the company may dispose of it in all respects as if it had been forfeited under the provisions hereinbefore contained (p).

IN SUBSTITUTION FOR CLAUSE 42.

MODIFICATION OF CLASS RIGHTS.

If at any time the share capital of the company is divided into different classes of shares the rights attached to any class (unless otherwise provided by the terms of issue of the shares of that class) may be varied with the consent in writing of the holders of three-fourths of the issued shares of that class (q) or with the sanction of an extraordinary resolution passed at a separate general meeting of the holders of the shares of the class. To every such separate general meeting the provisions of these presents relating to general meetings shall mutatis mutandis apply but so that the necessary quorum shall be two persons at least holding or representing by proxy one-third of the issued shares of the class.

(o) This form will require an alteration in Clause 41. It was apparently usually inserted in charters from the Crown, see per Kekewich, J., Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, Ltd., [1899] 2 Ch. 48; and it is in the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, s. 18. It is, however, not very common now.

(p) So far as regards forfeiture, a somewhat similar clause may be found in the case of the company in Heward v. Wheatley (1853), 3 De G. M. & G. 628, but that was a company formed under 7 Geo. IV. c. 46, and it is doubtful whether forfeiture is allowable in the case of a limited company except for non-payment of calls seeing that forfeiture is an exception to the rule that a limited company cannot be a shareholder in itself and presumably proceeds on the footing that the owner of the shares forfeited is not worth suing. See ante, p. 71, and infra, p. 275 as to this.

(q) These clauses apply where the rights are not given by the memorandum and, probably, if contained in the original articles even where the rights are given by the memorandum; this point is discussed below, pp. 317 and 318. They are liable to abuse in cases where persons hold a larger number of shares in other classes of shares, or have some interest adverse to that of the class they represent.

Share Warrants.

In Substitution for Clauses 57 et seq.

The directors may on the issue of any share-warrant make such conditions as to the terms upon which the same may be surrendered and as to which if any of the rights of a member are to be conferred thereby and generally in relation to such share-warrant as they think fit.

Voting.

In Substitution for Clause 81.

Every ordinary share shall confer one vote and every founders share shall confer two votes.

Every member shall have one vote for every share up to ten and an additional vote for every five shares beyond ten shares up to one hundred and an additional vote for every ten shares beyond the first hundred.

The directors may on the issue of any debentures provide that the holders of such debentures shall be entitled to such votes at any general meeting of the company as may be thought fit but nothing herein contained shall be deemed to authorize the directors to make any provision enabling any person to vote in respect of any debenture held by him on a special or an extraordinary resolution.

Every ordinary share shall confer one vote and every preference share shall confer one vote on any resolution affecting the rights of the preference shareholders or authorizing the issue of any debentures or the giving of any security or for the winding-up of the company.

Form to be added to Clause 88 in the Case of Companies Carrying on Business in a Foreign Country, for the Purpose of Enabling Non-Residents to Vote.

Any member who is resident in Egypt (r) may give his proxy to vote for or against any resolution to the chairman of the board of directors or other the chairman of the meeting at which it is proposed that such proxy shall be used by depositing the same at any office of the company in Egypt not less than three days prior to the holding of such meeting and particulars of the proxies so deposited shall be communicated by telegram to such chairman for use at such meeting.

Directors.

Alternative for Clauses 91 and 92 (First Directors).

The first directors shall be A. B. of C. D. of E. F. of etc.

Alternative for Clause 94 (Remuneration of Directors).

The remuneration of the directors shall from time to time be determined by the company in general meeting (s).

or

The directors shall be entitled to receive by way of remuneration

(r) The stamp on these proxies would now appear to be 1*d*., and they may be stamped before the expiration of thirty days after it is first received in England: Finance Act, 1907, s. 9.

£5000 per annum. Such remuneration shall be divided among the directors in such proportions and manner as they shall from time to time agree upon and in default of agreement the same shall be divided among them equally (t).

ANOTHER ALTERNATIVE FOR ARTICLE 94.

Each of the directors shall receive as a remuneration for his services and there shall be allowed to each of them from the date of the incorporation of the company a sum calculated at the rate of £200 per annum with a sum calculated at the rate of £50 per annum extra for the chairman and such sums shall be paid at such times as the directors may determine (u) and they shall also be entitled to receive and be paid a sum equal to 5 per cent. of the dividends distributed in each year: such percentage shall be divided equally between them but so that any director who has not held office for the whole year shall only receive a sum proportionate to the time during which he has served.

(EXPENSES OF DIRECTORS.)

Each director shall in addition to any other remuneration be entitled to be recouped all travelling hotel and other expenses properly incurred by him for the purpose of attending meetings of the directors or of any committee of the directors [or any general meeting of the company] or otherwise in the course of the company's business (x).

TO BE ADDED AFTER CLAUSE 94 (WHERE DESIRED).
(POWER TO FOREGO REMUNERATION.)

A resolution of the directors providing that directors shall not be paid any remuneration which has not actually been paid whether the same shall have become payable or not or that the directors shall not be entitled to any remuneration for a period or postponing the payment of any such remuneration shall be valid and binding on all the directors (y).

TO BE ADDED AFTER CLAUSE 95 WHERE THE COMPANY CARRIES ON BUSINESS ABROAD. (LOCAL BOARDS.)

The directors may provide for the management of the affairs of the company in England [or abroad] (z) in such manner as they may think fit and in particular they may appoint any person or persons to be directors in England [or abroad] (z) and may provide that such person or persons shall receive such remuneration and shall require such qualification, if any, and shall hold office for such period as the directors think fit and shall have all the powers rights and duties hereby conferred on (t) In this case nothing will be received for any part of a whole year. Salton v. New Beeston Cycle Co., [1899] 1 Ch. 775, where this is not desired it is best to give each director his share of remuneration as in Clause 94.

(u) The determination of a time for payment is a condition precedent to any payment, Caridad Copper Mining Co. v. Swallow, [1902] 2 K. B. 44. The case of Nell v. Atlanta Gold and Silver Mines, (1895), 11 T. L. R. 407, depended on very special wording.

(x) If such expenses are to be allowed there must be such an article. Young v. Naval, Military and Civil Service Co-operative Society of South Africa, [1905] 1 K. B. 687.

(y) This clause gets over the difficulty felt in Lambert v. Northern Railway of Buenos Ayres (1870), 18 W. R. 180, and referred to in McConnell's Claim, [1901] 1 Ch. 728.

(z) To be inserted if the ordinary place for holding directors' meetings is in England, in which case the words "in England" will be omitted.

directors or some only of such powers rights and duties but any such appointment shall provide that such powers rights and duties shall be exercised only in England [or abroad] (z).

INSERT IN CLAUSE 96 AFTER SUB-CLAUSE 4 WHERE DESIRED.

(5) If he be absent from six consecutive meetings of the directors without the leave of his co-directors.

ALTERATIONS TO ARTICLES 101 et seq., (WHERE SOME OF THE DIRECTORS ARE TO BE APPOINTED BY THE PROMOTERS OR DEBENTURE HOLDERS, ETC., OF THE COMPANY).

Add at the end of Article 98.

For the purposes of this and the next succeeding article no nominated director shall be deemed to be a director.

Substitute for Article 101.

The company at the ordinary meeting at which any director other than the said A.B. or C.D. or any person nominated to fill the place of either of them under the provisions hereinafter contained shall retire shall fill up the office vacated by the retirement of such director by electing another director. On the retirement of the said A.B. or of the said C.D. (a) or of any person appointed to fill the place of either of them (all of which persons are herein referred to as the nominated directors) X.Y. of shall during his life and after his death his executors or administrators or the trustees of his will while they hold shares in the company shall have power to appoint a new director to fill up the office of the nominated director so retiring.

[Then will follow Clause 102. Clauses 103 and 105 will in many cases be omitted.]

For Clause 104.

The company may by extraordinary resolution remove any director other than a nominated director before the expiration of his term of office and the person (if any) entitled to appoint a nominated director (hereinafter called the nominator) may by writing under his hand remove a nominated director before the expiration of his term of office, and in such case the company or the nominator as the case may be may in the case of the company by ordinary resolution and in the case of the nominator by writing under his hand appoint another person in place of the person so removed by them or him. The person so appointed shall hold office during such time as the director in whose place he is appointed would have held the same if he had not been removed.

(z) To be inserted if the ordinary place for holding directors' meetings is in England, in which case the word "England" will be omitted.

(a) The Articles will contain a provision that A.B. and C.D. shall be two of the first directors; the directors will fill casual vacancies other than those caused by a nominated director ceasing to act, the nominator will appoint in the case of casual vacancies among the nominated directors.

Upon the executors administrators and the trustees of the will of the said X.Y. ceasing to have the powers of nomination hereinbefore given to them any director nominated by them shall forthwith cease to be a director [or shall for the purposes of these presents be deemed to be a director appointed otherwise than by nomination and the date when he was last nominated shall be deemed to be the date of his last election.]

The following article is sometimes added (Alternate directors)—

It shall be lawful for any director by writing under his hand to appoint any other person to act as a director in his place and any person so appointed shall while his appointment shall continue have all the powers rights and duties which but for such appointment the person appointing him would have had: but so that if for any reason the director making the appointment shall cease to hold office the powers rights and duties of the person so appointed shall forthwith cease, and so that such last-mentioned person shall not require any qualification or receive any remuneration from the company.

Sometimes there is an article appointing some person or persons to be a governing director or governing directors (b). (Governing director.)

A.B. of   and C.D. of   shall be governing directors of the company and each of them shall hold such office during his life or until he shall give notice to the company resigning such office or shall cease to hold his qualification shares.

A governing director shall in addition to any casting vote he may have, have two votes at every meeting of the directors—or of a committee of the directors—and he shall have power to veto any act done or resolution passed at a meeting of directors in all cases where the directors have a discretion as to whether they will or will not do a particular thing or pass a particular resolution. Such power of veto must be exercised within fourteen days after the act or resolution vetoed was done or passed and within such period notice in writing of such exercise must be given to the company [provided always that if any governing director shall exercise the power of veto hereby given to him and the other governing director and two-thirds of the directors other than governing directors shall within fourteen days after notice of such exercise has been given to the company as hereinbefore provided sign a resolution declaring that it is not desirable that such veto shall take effect then and in such case such veto shall be void and of no effect] (c).

For Clause 111 is (occasionally) substituted (Resolution signed by majority of directors)—

A resolution in writing signed by a majority [or by two-thirds] of the directors shall have the same effect as a resolution passed at a meeting of directors.

Mortgages and Charges.

Amongst the clauses dealing with mortgages or charges is occasionally a clause in the following form:—

The company shall not mortgage or charge any of its property or assets

(b) If there is a governing director the provisions dealing with the vacation of the office of directors, retirement by rotation, removal of directors, etc., should be made to apply to directors other than governing directors.

(c) The words in brackets may be added to avoid a deadlock where there is more than one governing director.

without the consent of the preference shareholders to be obtained in the same way in all respects as is hereby provided in cases where it is proposed to modify the rights of such preference shareholders (d).

DIVIDENDS, ETC. (e).

Substitute for Article 126.

Subject to the rights of members whose shares have been issued on special terms all dividends shall be paid to the members in proportion to their shares (f).

Subject to the rights of persons if any entitled to shares with special rights as to dividends all dividends shall be declared and paid according to the amounts paid on the shares but if and so long as nothing is paid up on any of the issued shares in the company dividends may be declared and paid according to the amounts of the shares. No amount paid on a share in advance of calls shall while carrying interest be treated for the purpose of this article as paid on the share (g).

Clause to be used with Article 126, that clause being varied by inserting the word " ordinary " before the word " shares " at the end of the clause (vendors' shares to be treated as paid in advance of calls).

The Shares numbered to in the capital of the company shall be called vendors shares and any amount which is paid up or deemed to be paid up on any such share and which is in excess of the amount which has been paid up upon the ordinary shares of the company shall be deemed to be paid up in advance of calls and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. No amount paid up in advance of calls shall while carrying interest be treated as paid up for the purpose of any dividend or for the purpose of ascertaining the amount paid up on any ordinary share. If at any time different amounts shall be paid up on different ordinary shares then for the purpose of this Article the amount paid up on the ordinary shares of the company shall be deemed to be the amount paid up on the largest number of ordinary shares of the company and in case there are two or more sets of ordinary shares which are equal in numbers but have different amounts paid up the one of such sets which has the largest amount paid up shall for the purpose of this article be deemed to be the largest in number (gg).

(d) This clause may prove a great inconvenience, and very careful consideration should be given to all the facts of the case before adding it.

(e) The forms given for use in the memorandum may in many cases be adapted for use in the articles.

(f) The result of this clause is that fully paid shares get the same dividend as shares which are partly paid or on which nothing has been paid: Oakbank Oil Co. v. Crum (1883), 8 A. C. 65. For a case where shares have been consolidated, Wakefield Rolling Stock Co., [1892] 3 Ch. 165.

(g) This is the form of Article in Table A. It is thought that the last sentence of the article is quite unnecessary, for moneys paid in advance of calls would not appear to be moneys paid up on shares. They would appear rather to constitute a debt from the company to the shareholder: Lock v. Queensland, [1896] A. C. 461; Dale v. Martin (1883), 11 L. R. Ir. 371.

(gg) This clause will affect the rights on a winding-up if the articles contain clauses as to winding-up like the one on p. 114, supra.

Another Clause in lieu of 126 (one class to receive a fixed dividend—the other the balance of dividend).

Subject to the rights of members whose shares have been issued on special terms all funds available for dividend shall be distributed as follows in the first place in the payment of a cumulative [or non-cumulative] dividend at the rate of per cent. per annum to the members [or holders of preference shares] on the amounts paid up on their shares and the balance if any in the payment of a dividend to the members [or holders of ordinary shares] in proportion to their shares.

Another Form (each class to receive a fixed dividend, the balance to be distributed between the classes).

Any profits which the company may determine to distribute shall be applied and paid as follows—first in paying a non-cumulative dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum on the amount paid up on the preference shares, secondly in paying a non-cumulative dividend at the rate of 7 per cent. per annum on the amounts paid up on the ordinary shares; thirdly in paying a further dividend on the amounts paid up on the preference and ordinary shares pari passu as one class of shares [or and the balance of such profits shall be distributed as to one-third thereof among the holders of preference shares in proportion to the amounts paid up on their shares and as to two-thirds thereof among the holders of ordinary shares in proportion to the amounts paid up on their shares.]

Clauses to be substituted for Clause 127 (Interest out of capital).

The company may with the previous sanction of the Board of Trade pay interest at such rate and for such period as may be sanctioned by the Board of Trade on the amount for the time being paid up on any shares of the company issued or to be issued for the purpose of raising money to defray the expenses of the construction of any works or buildings or the provision of any plant which cannot be made profitable for a lengthened period and any interest so paid shall be charged to capital as part of the cost of construction of such work or building or the provision of such plant (h).

Except in the cases provided for in the foregoing article no dividend shall be payable except out of the profits arising from the business of the company.

(h) This power may be given by special resolution or by the Articles (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 91). It obviously applies only to companies having some sort of an undertaking (e.g. a factory). In such companies even if this article is omitted it may be well to preface Article 127, or the Article corresponding to it, with words such as "Except in cases provided "by s. 91 of the Companies (Con-"solidation) Act, 1908, or any "statutory modification thereof for "the time being in force." A similar provision is made in the case of Indian Railways by the Indian Railways Act, 1894 (extended by 5 Ed. 7, c. 21), and amended by Indian Railways Amendment Act, 1906. There the power must be by special resolution or in the memorandum, and the sanction of the Secretary of State in Council of India, not of the Board of Trade, must be obtained. Section 91 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, does not apply to companies coming under these enactments. As to these provisions, see ante, pp. 80 and 81.

Another clause substituted for Clause 127 (Fund available for dividend).

No dividends shall be paid except out of the profits of the company [or the realized profits of the company].

Another clause which may be substituted for Clause 127.

No dividends shall be paid out of capital.

Form of article giving the shareholders an absolute right to the profits of the company. Omit Clauses 125, 126, 127, and 128, and continue.

No dividends shall be paid except out of the profits of the company.

The directors may in priority to any dividend set aside out of the profits of the company such sum as they think proper as a reserve fund to meet contingencies or for equalizing dividends or for repairing or maintaining works connected with the business of the company or any part thereof or for any other purpose the directors think proper and the directors may invest the sum so set apart as a reserve fund upon such investments as they may select.

Subject to the last preceding article and subject to any arrangement which may from time to time have been entered into relative to the remuneration of any manager or other officer of the company by way of commission or a percentage on the net profits of the company or any part thereof the entire net profits of each year shall be divided among the shareholders of the company in proportion to their shares (i).

The directors may from time to time declare interim dividends.

Clause to be substituted for Article 132 (Forfeiture of dividends).

No dividend shall bear interest against the company and all dividends unclaimed for three years after having been declared may be forfeited by the directors for the benefit of the company (k).

SECRET RESERVE FUND.

Clause to be added after Article 138.

If the directors shall set apart all or any part of the reserve fund to a secret reserve fund which they are hereby empowered to do such reserve fund need not except so far as is hereinbefore otherwise provided be shown or disclosed in the balance sheet or except so far as otherwise provided by the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908 in the summary required by section 26 of that Act (kk), nor save as aforesaid need the directors give any information to the shareholders as to the amount invested or application thereof but all particulars relating thereto shall be disclosed to the auditors of the company whose duty it shall be to see that the same is applied for the purposes of the company but except where they consider it necessary for the proper fulfilment of their duties as auditors they shall not give any information with regard to the same to the members or otherwise (l).

(i) The effect of an article of this kind in a winding-up is shown by Bridgewater Navigation Co., [1891] 2 Ch. 317. It is, however, very unusual, as to the effect of the usual form of Article. Crichton's Oil Co., [1902] 2 Ch. 86.

(k) This form not to be used where a Stock Exchange quotation is desired.

(kk) In the case of a private company, as section 26 of the Act does not apply, the words "except so far as is hereinbefore" to "save as aforesaid" may be omitted, and in their place the words, "notwithstanding anything hereinbefore contained" may be inserted.

NOTICES.

Sometimes in the notices clauses is added a clause in somewhat the following form:—

In cases not herein otherwise provided for any notice may be given by advertisement in a newspaper circulating in the neighbourhood of the registered office of the company and any such notice shall be deemed to be duly given on the day on which the advertisement appears.

WINDING-UP.

Variations of Article 154.

Where the original capital consists of two classes of shares.

Subject to the rights conferred on the holders of preference shares in the original capital of the capital of the company by the company's memorandum of association and to any rights which may be conferred on the holders of any shares which may be issued on special terms the assets of the company remaining after satisfaction of the debts and liabilities of the company and after payment of the costs of liquidation shall on a winding-up be divided among the holders of the ordinary shares of the company.

Or in cases where the preference or founder's shares are to have a preference as to capital and the memorandum of association does not deal with the point (m).

On a winding-up the assets remaining after satisfaction of the debts and liabilities of the company and after payment of the costs of liquidation shall be paid and applied as follows. First in repayment to the preference shareholders of the amounts paid up on their shares [together with a bonus of 10*s*. per share]. Secondly in repayment to the ordinary shareholders of the amounts paid up on their shares and the balance shall be distributed [as to one-third thereof among the preference shareholders and as to the remaining two-thirds] among the ordinary shareholders. This clause is without prejudice to the rights of persons whose shares are issued on special terms.

PROVISION WHERE CAPITALISTS HAVE PUT MONEY INTO THE CONCERN ON THE TERMS THAT SUCH MONEY IS TO BE REPAID BEFORE ANYTHING IS RETURNED IN RESPECT OF PAYMENTS MADE OTHERWISE THAN IN CASH.

On a winding-up the assets remaining after satisfaction of all the debts and liabilities of the company and after payment of the costs of liquidation shall be paid and applied as follows. First in repayment to such members as have paid for their shares either wholly or partly in cash of the cash so paid by them. Secondly in repayment to such members as have paid for their shares either wholly or partly otherwise than in cash of the amounts which they are credited as having paid otherwise than in cash and the balance shall be distributed among the members in proportion to the amounts paid or which ought to have been paid by them at the commencement of the winding-up in respect of their shares without making any distinction as to the manner in which such payment was made and if there shall not be sufficient assets to repay the whole of the cash paid or as the case may be the whole amount credited as having been paid in respect of the shares of the company then all losses shall be borne as follows that is to say in the first case in proportion to the amount of cash paid or agreed to be paid in respect of the shares and in the second case in proportion to the amount credited as having been paid otherwise than in cash in respect of the shares.

(l) This clause gives effect to the law laid down by Newton v. Birmingham Small Arms, [1906] 2 Ch. 378, as altered by s. 26 (3) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, which does not apply to private companies. It is doubtful whether the amount of the fund would have to be disclosed. See post, pp. 409 and 410 as to this case.

(m) The fact of shares conferring on their holders a preference as to dividend, does not cause them to confer a preference as to capital on winding-up. London India-rubber Co. (1867), 5 Eq. 519.

This clause is without prejudice to the rights of persons whose shares have been issued on special conditions.

PROVISION TO BE ADDED WHERE THERE ARE DIFFERENT CLASSES OF SHARES IN LIEU OF PART OF CLAUSE 154.

Any assets divisible among any class of shareholders under the provisions hereinbefore contained shall be divided among them in proportion to the amounts or which ought to have been paid by them at the commencement of the winding-up in respect of their shares. This clause is without prejudice to the rights of persons whose shares are issued on special terms.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATIONS.

(Short Form Incorporating Table A.)

THE COMPANIES (CONSOLIDATION) ACT, 1908.

Company Limited by Shares.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION OF THE COMPANY, LIMITED.

1. The regulations contained in Table A. in the First Schedule to the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908 (hereinafter called Table A.) shall except so far as they are hereinafter varied apply to the company.

2. The following expressions shall when they occur in Table A. or in these presents have the following meanings.

The expression "the company" shall mean the above mentioned company.

The expressions "the directors" "the Board" mean respectively the directors and the Board of Directors of the Company and the definition of the word director contained in section 285 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908 is excluded.

The expression "month" shall mean calendar month.

3. The directors may proceed to allotment upon a minimum subscription of shares.

4. The company may pay to any person a commission at a rate not exceeding   per cent. in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe whether absolutely or conditionally for any shares in the company or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions whether absolute or conditional for any shares in the company.

5. Clause 9 of Table A. shall be varied by inserting after the word "called" the words "or liable to be called" and after the words "presently payable by him or his estate" the words "either alone or jointly with any other person," and between the words "the company" and the words "but the directors" the words "and the company shall have a like lien on all shares other than fully paid shares (n) standing registered in the name of more persons than one for all moneys presently payable by them or any one or more of them or the estates of all or any one or more of them either alone or jointly with any other person to the company."

6. Clause 11 shall be varied by striking out the words "subject to a like lien for sums not presently payable as existed on the shares prior to the sale."

7. Clause 12 shall be varied by adding at the end of the words "This Article shall be without prejudice to the rights of any member in respect of any share which has been issued to him on special conditions."

8. Clause 13 of Table A. shall be varied by insertion of the words "and instalments" after the words "all calls" and Clause 25 by the insertion of the words "or the instalment became payable" after the words "the call was made."

9. Clause 33 shall be varied by adding the words "and in the assets on a winding-up" after the words "dividends and profits of the company" and Clause 34 by striking out the words "other than those relating to share warrants."

10. Clause 43 of Table A. shall be varied by inserting at the beginning thereof the words "subject to any direction to the contrary that may be given by the resolution sanctioning the increase of share-capital."

11. Clause 46 of Table A. shall be varied by omitting the words "at such time in the month following that in which the anniversary of the company's incorporation occurs and at such place," and by omitting all words after the words "as the directors shall approve."

12. Clause 47 of Table A. shall be varied by striking out the words "above mentioned" and adding after the words "general meetings" where they first occur the words "in the last preceding clause hereof mentioned."

13. Clause 49 of Table A. shall be varied by substituting the words "the accidental omission to give any such notice" for the words "the non-receipt of the notice by any member."

14. Clause 68 of Table A. shall be varied by inserting after the words "the number of the directors" the words "shall be not more than   or less than   ," and by adding at the end the words "and until directors are appointed the subscribers to the memorandum of association

(n) Where a quotation on the Stock Exchange is not desired the words "other than fully paid shares" may be omitted here, in which case the words "not being a fully paid share," and "other than fully paid shares" where they occur in the said Clause 9, will be omitted.

shall have all the powers by these presents or by Table A. conferred on directors."

15. The qualification of a director shall be the holding of shares of the nominal value of £ in the capital of the company either as sole holder or as the one of several joint holders whose name stands first in the register of members and any person who accepts the office of director and who is not already qualified shall unless he obtain his qualification within one month from the date of his appointment be deemed to have agreed to take his qualification shares from the company and the company shall allot the same accordingly. Clause 70 of Table A. shall not apply to this company.

16. Clause 77 of Table A. shall be varied by inserting in sub-clause (e) thereof after the words "any contract with the company" the words "without declaring his interest at the meeting of the directors at which such contract is determined upon if his interest then exists or in any other case at the first meeting of the directors after the acquisition of such interest" and by the substitution in the proviso to such clause of the words "any contract or work in which he is either directly or indirectly concerned or interested" for the words "any such contract or work."

17. Clause 78 of Table A. shall be varied by inserting the words "other than any managing director or manager after the words "the whole of the directors" and also after the words "one-third of the directors for the time being."

18. Clause 94 of Table A. shall be varied by adding the words "or a managing director or manager" after the words "acting as a director" and also at the end of the clause.

19. Clause 98 of Table A. shall be varied by striking out the words "but if and so long as nothing is paid up on any of the shares in the company dividends may be declared and paid according to the amount of the shares."

20. Clause 110 of Table A. shall be varied by omitting the words "unless the contrary is proved to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post" and substituting the words "any such notice shall be deemed to have been served within twenty-four hours from the time when the letter containing the same was put into the post office."

21. On a winding-up if there are any assets remaining after satisfaction of all the debts and liabilities of the company and after payment of the costs of liquidation and repayment to the shareholders of the amounts respectively paid by them on their shares then the assets so remaining shall be divided among the shareholders in proportion to the amounts paid or which ought to have been paid by them at the commencement of the winding-up in respect of their shares; but if after payment of the said debts and liabilities and costs there shall not remain sufficient assets to repay to the shareholders the amounts respectively paid by them on their shares then the loss shall be borne by the shareholders in proportion to the amounts paid by them or which ought to have been paid by them at the commencement of the winding-up in respect of their shares. This article is without prejudice to the rights of persons whose shares are issued on special conditions.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION FOR PRIVATE COMPANY (o).

Use ordinary form (pp. 95 et seq.) except as herein varied. Omit Clauses 3 and 4, and Clause 5, and insert instead of 3—

PRIVATE COMPANY.

3. (1) The number of members exclusive of persons who are in the employment of the company shall not exceed fifty. For the purpose of this Article two or more persons holding one or more shares jointly shall be treated as a single member.

(2) The public shall not be invited to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company.

(3) The right to transfer shares of the company shall be restricted in manner hereinafter provided.

Clause 8 and 9 may be omitted.

In Clause 22 omit if thought fit, the words "not being a fully paid share" in each case where they occur.

Clause 37—omit everything after the words "The directors may decline to register any transfer of any shares" (p), or insert one of the clauses on pp. 126 et seq.

Clause 51. Strike out the words "in such manner as they think most beneficial to the company" and substitute "in any manner which they think beneficial to the company and which does not contravene the provisions of Article 3 (q) of these presents.

Clauses 55 to 61. The registrar declines to register as a private company a company whose articles allow of share-warrants and it will therefore usually be necessary to omit these provisions altogether.

Clause 120. Omit.

Clause 138. Strike out everything between the words "Every such balance sheet" and the words "shall state the total amount of the sums paid by way of commission."

Clause 139 must be omitted and Clause 140 may be omitted if desired.

In very small companies the provisions as to the numbers required for a quorum and for demanding a poll will sometimes have to be altered (qq).

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION OF A COMPANY LIMITED BY GUARANTEE AND NOT HAVING A SHARE CAPITAL.

THE COMPANIES (CONSOLIDATION) ACT, 1908.

Company Limited by Guarantee and not having a Capital divided into Shares.

ARTICLES OF ASSOCIATION OF LIMITED.

NUMBER OF MEMBERS.

1. The Company for the purpose of registration is declared to consist of members, but the directors may at any time register an increase of members.

(o) These companies need only have two members. Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 2.

(p) It is thought that the restriction must apply to all shares, but there is nothing to prevent one restriction being made applicable to one set of shares, and another to another set.

(q) The Articles restricting the number of members and forbidding an offer of shares or debentures to the company.

(qq) It will sometimes also be desirable to allow non-members to act as proxies. This will be expressly provided for.

2. In the construction of these Articles of Association the following expressions shall where the context admits have the following meanings :—

Words importing the singular number only shall include the plural number; and words importing the plural number only shall include the singular number; words importing the masculine gender only shall include females; and words importing persons shall include corporations.

The word "month" shall mean calendar month.

The expression "the Company" shall mean the above-mentioned Company.

The expressions "the directors" "the board" shall mean respectively the directors and the board of directors of the Company.

The expression "member" shall mean a member of the Company.

The expression "these presents" shall mean these Articles of Association.

Members.

3. Every person who insures any ship or share in a ship with the Company shall be deemed to have agreed to become a member.

4. The directors may decline to accept any person as a member.

5. Any member may give the Company three months' notice of his intention to resign his membership, and on the expiration of such period he shall cease to be a member.

6. The Company in general meeting in all cases and the directors in the cases hereinafter specified may exclude any person from membership.

7. Any person who has ceased to be a member shall continue liable in respect of all claims incurred up to the time of his ceasing to be a member.

8. Any person who has ceased to be a member shall be entitled to all rights which have accrued to him while a member under any policy of insurance effected with the Company; but from the date of his ceasing to be a member he shall be excluded from all benefits to which members are entitled under these presents and as from such date every such policy shall be deemed to have come to an end.

Business.

9. Every contract of insurance shall be made in the name and under the common seal of the Company.

10. The Company shall not be liable to any member or other person for the amount of any loss except to the extent of the funds which it is able to recover from the members or other persons liable for the same, and which are applicable for the purpose.

11. Every engagement or liability of a member in respect of any insurance shall for all purposes relative to enforcing such engagement or liability be deemed to be an engagement or liability by or on the part of such member to the Company and not to any other member or members and all moneys payable thereunder shall be paid to the Company.

Calls and Subscriptions.

12. There shall be paid to the Company for each ship on admission an entrance fee of 1*s.* per cent. on the amount insured and on or before January 1st in each succeeding year a like sum of 1*s.* per cent.

13. The directors may from time to time make such calls upon the members in respect of allowed claims and current expenses as they think fit provided that fourteen days' notice at least shall be given of each call.

14. Every such call shall be made on all the members rateably in the proportions which the sums insured by them respectively bear to the amount of all the sums insured by the Company at the respective times of the losses giving rise to the claims.

15. Each member shall be liable to pay any call made on him and any subscription presently payable by him at the time and place appointed by the directors.

16. A call shall be deemed to have been made at the time when the resolution of the directors authorizing such call was passed.

17. If before or on the day appointed for payment of any call or subscription any member does not make such payment then he shall be liable to pay such call or subscription together with interest on the same at the rate of five pounds per cent. per annum from the day appointed for payment thereof to the time of actual payment but the directors shall be at liberty to waive payment of such interest wholly or in part.

18. In the event of any sums for the time being payable by any member of the Company not being duly paid the amount of such deficiency shall be borne and made good rateably in the proportions before-mentioned by the other members of the Company. For the purposes of ascertaining the rateable amount payable by any member under this article the member in default shall be deemed to have ceased to be a member.

19. Each member who may for the time being be entitled to receive from the Company any loss claim or demand shall bear and contribute his own proportion thereof as a member.

Forfeiture.

20. If any member fails to pay any call or any subscription on the day appointed for payment thereof the directors may at any time thereafter during such time as the call or subscription remains unpaid serve a notice on him or on his personal representative requiring payment of such call or subscription together with interest and any expenses that may have accrued by reason of such non-payment.

21. The notice shall name a further day not earlier than the expiration of fourteen days from the day of such notice on or before which such call or subscription and all interest and expenses that may have accrued by reason of such non-payment are to be paid.

22. The notice shall also state that in the event of non-payment at or before the time appointed the member to whom the notice is sent will be excluded from membership.

23. If the requisitions of any such notice as aforesaid are not complied with the member to whom such notice has been given may at any time thereafter before the payment required by the notice has been made be excluded from membership by a resolution of the directors to that effect.

24. If any member shall become bankrupt he shall forthwith cease to be a member.

General Meetings.

25. The first general meeting of members of the Company shall be held within a period of not less than one month nor more than three months from the date at which the Company is incorporated.

26. Subsequent general meetings shall be held once at least in each calendar year at such time and place as may be prescribed by the directors but so that no such meeting shall be held at an interval of more than fifteen months from the last preceding general meeting. The meetings in this and the last preceding article referred to shall be called ordinary meetings.

27. Every general meeting of the Company other than an ordinary meeting shall be called an extraordinary meeting.

28. The directors may whenever they think fit and shall on the requisition of not less than five members who have paid all calls or other sums then due from them forthwith proceed to convene an extraordinary meeting.

29. The requisition must state the objects of the meeting and must be signed by the requisitionists and deposited at the office of the Company and may consist of several documents in like form each signed by one or more requisitionists.

30. If the directors do not proceed to cause a meeting to be held within twenty-one days from the date of the requisition being so deposited the requisitionists or a majority of them may themselves convene the meeting but any meeting so convened shall not be held after three months from the date of such deposit.

31. If at any such meeting a resolution requiring confirmation at another meeting is passed the directors shall forthwith convene a further extraordinary meeting for the purpose of considering the resolution and if thought fit of confirming it as a special resolution and if the directors do not convene the meeting within seven days from the passing of the first resolution the requisitionists or a majority of them may themselves convene the meeting.

32. Any meeting convened by requisitionists as aforesaid shall be convened in the same manner as nearly as possible as that in which meetings are to be convened by directors.

33. Seven days' notice at the least specifying the place the day and the hour of the meeting and in case of special business the general nature of such business shall be given to the members in manner hereinafter mentioned or in such other manner if any as may be prescribed by the Company in general meeting; but the accidental omission to give any such notice by any member shall not invalidate the proceedings at any meeting.

34. In the case of a special resolution the notice convening the two meetings may be given at one and the same time and the second meeting shall be deemed to have been properly convened notwithstanding the fact that such notice states that it will only be held in the event of the resolution proposed at the first meeting having been passed by the requisite majority.

35. All business shall be deemed special that is transacted at an extraordinary meeting and all that is transacted at an ordinary meeting with the exception of the consideration of the accounts balance sheets and ordinary reports of directors.

PROCEEDINGS AT GENERAL MEETINGS.

36. Except as hereinafter provided no business shall be transacted at any general meeting unless a quorum of members is present at the time when the meeting proceeds to business.

37. At any general meeting a quorum shall consist of three members personally present and entitled to vote.

38. If within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting a quorum is not present the meeting if convened on the requisition of members shall be dissolved in any other case it shall stand adjourned to the same day in the next week at the same time and place and if at such adjourned meeting a quorum is not present within half an hour from the time appointed for the meeting any two or more members present and entitled to vote shall be a quorum.

39. The chairman of the board of directors shall preside as chairman at every meeting of the Company; but if at any time there is no such chairman or he is not present within fifteen minutes after the time appointed for holding the meeting or if he is unwilling to act the members present shall choose one of the directors who is present and willing to act to be chairman; but if there be no such director then the members present shall choose some one of their own number to be chairman.

40. The chairman may with the consent of the meeting adjourn any meeting from time to time and from place to place but no business shall be transacted at any adjourned meeting other than the business left unfinished at the meeting from which the adjournment took place.

41. At any general meeting a resolution put to the vote of the meeting shall be decided by a show of hands of persons present and entitled to vote unless a poll is demanded by at least two persons present and entitled to vote and unless a poll is so demanded a declaration of the chairman that such resolution has been carried or carried by a particular majority or lost shall be deemed to be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against such resolution.

42. If a poll is demanded on any resolution by the requisite number of persons it shall be taken in such manner as the chairman directs and the result of such poll shall be deemed to be the resolution of the Company in general meeting. In the case of an equality of votes whether on a show of hands or at a poll at any general meeting of the company the chairman shall be entitled to a casting vote in addition to any vote or votes to which he is otherwise entitled.

43. A poll demanded on the election of a chairman or on a question of the adjournment of a meeting shall be taken forthwith. A poll demanded on any other question shall be taken at such time as the chairman of the meeting directs.

VOTES.

44. Every member shall have one vote.

45. If any member is an infant or a lunatic or of unsound mind he may vote by his guardian committee curator bonis or other legal curator.

46. If a Company is a member it may vote by any person authorized by resolution of its directors to act as its representative at any meeting and such representative shall be entitled on behalf of such Company to exercise the same functions as if he were a member.

47. No member shall be entitled to vote at any meeting of the Company unless all calls or other sums presently payable by him to the Company have been paid.

48. On a poll votes may be given either personally or by proxy.

49. No person shall act as a proxy unless he is apart from any proxy he holds entitled to be present and vote at the meeting at which he acts as a proxy.

50. Every proxy shall be in writing under the hand of the appointor and shall be deposited at the registered office of the Company not less than two clear days before the day appointed for holding the meeting or adjourned meeting at which the person named in such proxy proposes to vote and in default the proxy shall not be treated as valid.

51. Any instrument appointing a proxy shall be in the following form or as near thereto as circumstances will admit:—

THE COMPANY LIMITED.

I of in the county of being a member of the above-mentioned Company hereby appoint of or failing him of as my proxy to vote for me and on my behalf at the (ordinary or extraordinary as the case may be) general meeting of the company to be held on the day of 19 and at any adjournment thereof. Dated this day of 19 .

DIRECTORS.

52. The number of directors shall not be less than or more than but in the event of any casual vacancy occurring and reducing the number of directors to below the aforesaid minimum the continuing directors or director may act for the purpose of filling up such vacancy or vacancies or of summoning a general meeting of the Company.

53. The first directors shall be appointed by the subscribers to the Memorandum of Association.

54. Until directors are appointed the subscribers to the Memorandum of Association shall have all the powers hereby conferred on directors.

55. Each director shall receive by way of remuneration for his services a sum calculated at the rate of £ per annum.

POWERS AND DUTIES OF DIRECTORS.

56. The business of the Company shall be managed by the directors who may pay all expenses incurred in getting up and registering the Company and may exercise all such powers of the Company as are not by statute or by these articles required to be exercised by the Company in general meeting; but the exercise of all such powers shall be subject to and in accordance with the provisions of any statute in that behalf and of these presents and shall also be subject to and in accordance with any regulations or provisions made by the Company in general meeting, but no regulation made by the Company in general meeting shall invalidate any prior act of the directors which would have been valid if such regulation had not been made.

DISQUALIFICATION OF DIRECTORS.

57. The office of director shall be vacated:—

(1) If he becomes bankrupt or insolvent;

(2) If he becomes incapable of acting therein;

(3) If at any time subsequently to his election he accepts or continues to hold any office or place of profit under the Company other than that of managing director or manager or trustee of a trust deed for securing debentures;

(4) If he contracts with or is concerned or interested in or participate in the profits of any contract with the Company or participate in the profits of any work done for the Company without declaring his interest at the meeting of the directors at which such contract is determined upon or work ordered if his interest then exists or in any other case at the first meeting of the directors after the acquisition of his interest. Provided always that the office of director shall in no case be vacated by reason of his being a member of any Company which has entered into contracts with or done any work for the Company;

(5) If he gives notice in writing to the Company resigning his directorship.

58. No director shall vote on any contract except a contract for indemnifying him against any loss he may suffer by reason of his becoming or being surety for the Company in which he is either directly or indirectly concerned or interested and if he does so vote his vote shall not be counted.

ROTATION OF DIRECTORS.

59. At the first ordinary meeting the whole of the directors (other than the managing director) shall retire from office, and at the first ordinary meeting in every subsequent year one-third of the directors (other than the managing director) or if their number is not a multiple of three then the number nearest to one-third shall retire from office.

60. The directors to retire in every year shall subject nevertheless as hereinafter provided be those directors (other than the managing director) who have been longest in office since their last election but as between persons who became directors on the same day those to retire shall unless they otherwise agree among themselves be determined by lot.

61. A retiring director shall be eligible for re-election.

62. The Company at the ordinary meeting at which any directors retire in manner aforesaid shall fill up the vacated offices by electing a like number of persons.

63. If at any meeting at which an election of directors ought to take place the places of the vacating directors are not filled up the vacating directors or such of them as have not had their places filled up shall continue in office until the ordinary meeting in the next year and so on from time to time until their places are filled up.

64. The Company may from time to time in general meeting increase or reduce the number of directors, but so that such number shall not be increased beyond the maximum number or reduced below the minimum number hereinbefore prescribed, and they may determine the order of rotation in which such increased or reduced number shall go out of office.

65. The Company may by extraordinary resolution remove any director before the expiration of his term of office and may by ordinary resolution appoint another person in his stead. The person so appointed shall hold office during such time as the director in whose place he is appointed would have held the same if he had not been removed.

66. The directors shall have power at any time to appoint any person a director either to fill a casual vacancy or as an addition to the Board but so that the total number of directors shall not be increased beyond the maximum number hereinbefore prescribed. Any director so appointed shall hold office only until the next ordinary meeting.

PROCEEDINGS OF DIRECTORS.

67. The directors may meet together for the despatch of business, adjourn and otherwise regulate their meetings as they think fit and determine the quorum necessary for the transaction of business, questions arising at any meeting shall be decided by a majority of votes ; in case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote ; a director may at any time summon a meeting of directors.

68. The directors may elect a chairman of their meetings and determine the period for which he is to hold office but if no such chairman is elected or if at any meeting the chairman is not present at the time appointed for holding such meeting the directors shall choose some one of their number to be chairman of such meeting.

69. The directors may delegate any of their powers to committees, consisting of such member or members of their body as they think fit ; any committee so formed shall, in the exercise of the powers so delegated conform to any regulations that may be imposed on them by the directors. Subject to any such regulations and to the provisions of these presents a committee may elect a chairman and otherwise regulate their meetings if no such chairman is elected or if he is not present at the time appointed for holding any meetings the members present shall choose one of their number to be chairman at such meeting.

70. A committee may meet and adjourn as they think proper. Questions arising at any meeting shall be determined by a majority of votes of the members present ; and in case of an equality of votes the chairman shall have a second or casting vote.

71. All acts done by any meeting of the directors or of a committee of directors or by any person acting as a director or as a managing director or as a manager shall notwithstanding that it be afterwards discovered that there was some defect in the appointment of any such director or person acting as aforesaid or that they or any of them were disqualified be as valid as if every such person had been duly appointed and was qualified to be a director or a managing director or a manager.

72. A resolution in writing signed by all the directors shall have the same effect as a resolution passed at a meeting of directors.

73. The directors shall have power to appoint one or more of their number to be managing director or manager for such term and upon such conditions as they see fit and they may delegate to such managing director or manager such of their powers as they in their absolute discretion shall think fit.

74. Any such managing director or manager shall receive for his services such remuneration whether by way of salary or commission or participation in profits or partly in one way and partly in another as the directors may think fit. A managing director or manager shall not be liable to retire by rotation while he continues to be a managing director or manager, but if in any other way he ceases to be a director his office of managing director or manager shall ipso facto be vacated.

75. The directors may employ any one or more of their number to do any special business for the Company and may remunerate any person so employed and such remuneration may be either in addition to or in substitution for the remuneration to which any such director is entitled as director.

MINUTES.

76. The directors shall cause minutes of all resolutions and proceedings of meetings of the Company and of the directors and of every committee of the directors to be duly entered in books to be from time to time provided for the purpose and such minutes shall be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which such resolution was passed or proceeding had or by the chairman of the next succeeding meeting. The minutes of every meeting of the directors or of a committee of the directors shall in addition state what directors were present at such meeting and at every such meeting each director present shall sign his name in a book to be kept for the purpose.

SEAL.

77. Every document bearing the common seal of the Company must be signed by at least two directors of the Company and countersigned by the secretary of the Company or some person duly authorized in that behalf by the directors.

ACCOUNTS.

78. The directors shall cause true accounts to be kept of the sums of moneys received and expended by the Company and the matter in respect of which such receipts and expenditure take place and of the assets and liabilities of the Company.

79. The books of account shall be kept at the registered office of the company and shall be open to the inspection of any director but except with the sanction of the directors no other person shall be entitled to inspect any book or document or account of the Company unless he is authorized so to do by statute or by these articles or by a resolution of the Company in general meeting.

80. Once at least in every year the directors shall lay before the Company in general meeting a statement of the income and expenditure for the past year made up to a date not more than six months before such meeting.

81. The statement so made shall show arranged under the most convenient heads the amount of gross income distinguishing the several sources from which it has been derived and the amount of gross expenditure distinguishing the expense of establishment salaries and other like matters; every item of expenditure fairly chargeable against the year's income shall be brought into account so that a just balance of profit and loss may be laid before the meeting and in cases where any item of expenditure which may in fairness be distributed over several years has been incurred in any one year the whole amount of such item shall be stated with the addition of the reasons why only a portion of such expenditure is charged against the income of the year.

82. A balance-sheet shall be made out in every year and laid before the Company in general meeting made up to a date not more than six months before such meeting. The balance-sheet shall be accompanied by a report of the directors as to the state of the Company's affairs.

83. A printed copy of every such balance-sheet and report and statement of income and expenditure shall seven days previously to the meeting be served on every member in manner in which notices are hereinafter directed to be served.

AUDITORS.

84. The Company shall at each ordinary meeting appoint an auditor or auditors to hold office until the next ordinary meeting.

85. A director or officer of the Company shall not be capable of being appointed an auditor of the Company.

86. A retiring auditor shall be re-eligible but no other person shall be capable of being appointed auditor at an ordinary meeting unless notice of an intention to nominate that person to the office of auditor has been given by a member to the Company not less than fourteen days before the ordinary meeting and the Company shall send a copy of any such notice to the retiring auditor and shall give notice thereof to the members in any mode in which notices are by these presents authorized to be given not less than seven days before the ordinary meeting provided always that if after a notice of the intention to nominate an auditor has been so given an ordinary meeting is called for a date fourteen days or less after that notice has been given the notice though not given in the time required by his provision shall be deemed to have been properly given for the purposes thereof and the notice to be sent or given by the Company may instead of being sent or given within the time required by this provision be sent or given at the same time as the notice of the ordinary meeting.

87. The first auditors of the Company may be appointed by the directors before the statutory meeting and if so appointed shall hold office until the first ordinary meeting unless previously removed by a resolution of the members in general meeting in which case the shareholders at such meeting may appoint auditors to hold office until the first ordinary meeting. In the event of the directors not having appointed auditors before the statutory meeting they shall within three months after such statutory meeting convene an extraordinary meeting of the Company for the purpose of appointing auditors to hold office until the first ordinary meeting of the Company.

88. The directors may fill any casual vacancy in the office of auditor but while any such vacancy continues the surviving or continuing auditor or auditors if any may act.

89. The remuneration of the auditors of the Company shall be fixed by the Company in general meeting except that the remuneration of any auditors appointed before the statutory meeting or to fill any casual vacancy may be fixed by the directors.

90. Every auditor of the company shall have a right of access at all times to the books and accounts and vouchers of the Company and shall be entitled to require from the directors and officers of the Company such information and explanations as may be necessary for the performance of his duties as auditor.

91. The auditors shall make a report to the members on the accounts examined by them and on every balance sheet laid before the Company in general meeting during their tenure of office and in every such report shall state whether or not they have obtained all the information and explanations they have required and whether in their opinion the balance-sheet referred to in the report is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the Company's affairs according to the best of their information and the explanations given to them and as shown by the books of the company.

92. The balance-sheet (signed by two directors or one director as above-mentioned) shall have the auditors' report attached to it or there shall be inserted at the foot of the balance-sheet a reference to the report and the report shall be read before the Company in general meeting and shall be open to inspection by any member who shall be entitled to be furnished with a copy of the balance-sheet and auditors' report at a charge not exceeding sixpence for every hundred words.

NOTICES.

93. Any notice may be served by the Company upon any member either personally or by sending it through the post in a prepaid letter addressed to such member at his registered address (or if he has no registered address within the United Kingdom) at the place if any within the United Kingdom supplied by him to the Company for the giving of notices to him.

94. Any notice if served by post shall be deemed to have been served within twenty-four hours from the time when the letter containing the same was put into the post-office ; and in proving such service it shall be sufficient to prove that such letter was properly addressed and put into the post office.

CHAPTER III.

Promoters.

The expression "promoter" is one, not infrequently found in the Companies (Consolidation) Act. It is, however, not an expression which lends itself to an exact definition. It is not a term of law but of business, usefully summing up in a single word a number of business operations familiar to the commercial world by which a company is generally brought into existence (a). The term "promoter" has been said to be a short and convenient way of designating those who set in motion the machinery by which the Companies Act enables an incorporated company to be created (b).

In another case it was stated that "a promoter is one who undertakes to form a company with reference to a given project, and who takes the steps necessary to accomplish that purpose" (c).

At the same time, it must be pointed out that a person who merely acts as servant or agent for a promoter, does not thereby himself become a promoter. To become a promoter he must act more or less on his own account. Thus a solicitor doing the legal work necessary for the promotion of a company, is not a promoter (d). Persons who are really promoters cannot by registering a sham company, and using its name instead of their own in all acts connected with the promotion, evade liability as promoters (e).

The business of a promoter consists in preparing and registering the memorandum and articles of the proposed company, in underwriting or procuring underwriters or subscribers for any shares or debentures which it is proposed the company shall issue on its incorporation, in preparing the prospectus, and generally in doing all preliminary work necessary for the formation of the company. In each case the time when a person first becomes a promoter is a question of fact, as also is the question when he ceases to be one. Usually, the mere fact that a person acquires property with a more or less indefinite view of selling it to a company, is not enough to constitute him a promoter (f).

(e) Re Darby, [1911] 1 K. B. 95, on this case the Judge held that the company was an "alias" for the persons who were alleged to be promoters.

A promoter is said to be in a fiduciary relation to the company when it is formed.

The meaning of this will perhaps be most conveniently discussed by dividing promoters into two classes, namely: (1) promoters who are selling property to the company; and (2) promoters who are not selling property to the company, but are simply rendering promotion services to it.

Turning to the first class of promoters, they are not agents for the company in purchasing any property which it is proposed that the company shall acquire, for a company which has not yet come into existence cannot have an agent (g).

Further, they are rarely, if ever, trustees for the intended company (h); but by an extension of the principles which apply to trustees and cestuis qui trustent, to principals and agents, and to other relations of this sort, promoters cannot deal with a company they are promoting without most fully disclosing all facts which it is material for it to know, and in particular a vendor, who has just bought property, which he is selling to a company at an enhanced price, must clearly state not only the fact, that he is making a profit, but the exact nature of the profit he is making (i).

Promoters are not bound to provide the company they are forming with an independent board of directors (k), but there can be no disclosure to a company unless there has been disclosure either to an independent board of directors (l) or to the company as a whole (m).

Where shares have been or are to be issued to the public, this disclosure should always be made by the prospectus. In fact, from one case (n) it would appear that where a prospectus is prepared, and no shares are taken on the strength of it, omissions in the prospectus may make a matter, which every shareholder knew of, undisclosed. In this connection it may be that a person who has in a prospectus fully complied with all the requirements of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, may yet find that his prospectus has not, having regard to his fiduciary character, made full enough disclosure to the company. It would appear that section 81, and the repealed sections of the Companies Act, 1900, and of the Companies Act, 1907, in no way derogate from the duties of a promoter who has framed a prospectus, and indeed they expressly declare that they do not limit or diminish any liability under the general law.

If a promoter fails to make disclosure of, or misstates any material fact, the company will usually be entitled to have the contract rescinded and set aside (o). This relief is equitable, and therefore it will not be necessary, as was formerly the case at law (p), to show that there is either fraud or a complete difference in substance between the thing bargained for and the thing sold.

The relief, however, being equitable, the Court will consider all the facts, to see whether it is just and equitable to grant it. The mere fact of the contract having been completed and the property having been conveyed is not, even where there is no case of fraud, fatal to the case of a plaintiff seeking rescission ; but this is a material fact (q). The real question, in these cases, is can the plaintiff restore the property he has obtained under the contract he is seeking to set aside, in the same, or something like the same, condition as it was when he got it (r). If not he cannot have rescission—and this, in the absence of fraud, would appear to be the case, where the property has been worked by directors nominated and dependent on the promoters, and has by such working had its whole character so altered that it cannot be restored in its original condition (s). Mere delay in taking proceedings for relief, will usually not be sufficient, unless the delay has occurred after full knowledge of the true facts (t).

This last proposition would appear to be true in all cases, though it was laid down in a case of fraud, and in cases of fraud it is easier to get rescission after alterations to the property, than in cases where the only ground for relief is non-disclosure or innocent misrepresentation (u).

But once a company's title to claim rescission is gone, it cannot usually in the absence of fraud get any relief against the promoter who has sold property to it (x), for the Court cannot make a new contract for the parties, or order the promoter to part with his property at a price at which he is not willing to part with it.

The cases where damages can be obtained though rescission is no longer possible, may perhaps be classed under four heads. In the first place, where a vendor or promoter has induced the company to buy by fraud. There the company will be entitled to keep its bargain, and to get damages for the fraud (y). The measure of damages where the promoter has fraudulently made a secret profit will usually be the amount of such profit (z).

In other cases, the rule would appear to be to take the value of the property the company would have acquired if all the statements had been true, as being worth the precise sum the company paid for such property, and to give as damages the difference between that sum and the real value of the property at the time of purchase (a). It would, however, appear that it would be open to a promoter to show that even with the additional advantages which the property would have had, if such statements had been true, it would not have been worth what was paid for it (b). Besides damage, it is necessary to prove in an action for fraud that a false representation has been made either (1) knowingly; or (2) without belief in its truth; or (3) recklessly, careless whether it be true or false (c). Mere non-disclosure will not where there is no duty to disclose amount to fraud unless it be of such a character as to render what is stated untrue (d), but a promoter or other person in a fiduciary character who conceals or does not disclose the fact that he has any interest in the property sold to the company, in effect states that he has no such interest, and is guilty of fraud (e). Promoters and other persons who are guilty of fraud are jointly and severally liable (f), and until the fraud has been discovered no statute of limitations will begin to run (g). Once the statute has begun to run six years would appear to be the period of limitation (h).

(2) Another case where damages can be obtained though rescission has become impossible, would appear to exist where the promoters have in the prospectus made definite, though innocent, misrepresentations of fact. In such case it would appear that damages can be given (i) presumably on some ground of equitable estoppel (k).

(3) A third exception to the rule has been stated to exist in the cases where a promoter has actually started promoting the intended company at the time when he acquires the property he ultimately sells to the company. In some of these cases (l) it has been said that he acquires the property as trustee for the intended company, and must account to it for any profit he makes on the resale, unless he fully performs his duty of disclosing the exact nature of the interest he takes. These cases, however, were cases of fraud, and in the Leeds and Hanley Theatres of Varieties case (m) the Court of Appeal expressly refused to deal with the case on this ground (n).

(4) Yet a fourth exception to the general rule has been suggested. It has been said that where a promoter sells to the company property having a definite market value at a price above that value, there it may be that, in the absence of full disclosure, the company could recover the difference between the two prices (o).

This proposition, however, seems to ignore the rule that the Court cannot make a contract for the parties.

(o) Cp. Cape Breton Co. (1885), 29 C. D. 795.

The next consideration is the position of promoters, who have not sold property to the company (p), but who have rendered it promotion services. In this case it would appear clear that, even where rescission has become impossible, the company can recover from the promoter any moneys he has received under a secret agreement (q).

It has been held that the amount recoverable is not the total amount paid over to the promoter, but such amount less the amount of any legitimate expenses incurred by him in forming and getting up the company (r), the principle on which such amount is recoverable being that a promoter cannot make a profit out of his position. In this case a promoter will apparently be liable, even though there has been no concealment of the fact that he has made some profit, though the amount is not stated (s).

These cases for the most part depend in part on fraud, but there is also in them the element of breach of trust (t).

But even where there is full disclosure there is often great difficulty in the way of this class of promoter recovering anything, even it would appear out of pocket expenses. Of course, if the promoter who is selling property to the company makes it a term of his bargain that the company shall pay his co-promoters for their services and expenses, and if they are parties to the agreement, they can recover (u).

Further, if they are not parties to the agreement, but they are, according to the terms of the agreement, to be paid out of the consideration money, there may be a trust or charge in their favour (x), and they may be able to sue the company on the agreement. But if the agreement simply contains a clause providing they are to be paid, a promoter who is not a party cannot sue on the agreement (y). If (u) Such a case would appear to be Sale Hotel v. Botanical Gardens (1898), 78 L. T. 368, which is, however, not very clearly reported. Possibly this very difficult case turns on the fact that misfeasance proceedings and not an action were brought, see per Rigby, L. J. S. C., 46 W. R. 617.

the agreement contains nothing about paying any one but the vendor, the question remains whether his co-promoters can recover on a quantum meruit. It is clear that in the absence of a resolution by the company solicitors and other agents retained by the promoters cannot (z), they must look to the promoters alone, and it would now seem to be clearly established that in such case the company will not be liable to its promoters (a).

These cases would seem to overrule the dicta in some of the earlier cases (b). This rule holds good even where the promoters have paid expenses which the company is bound by statute to pay (c).

Directors can apparently with express power on that behalf in the articles, pay the expenses of getting up and registering the company (d), but with regard to any other payment to a promoter, even where the articles give express power, there is difficulty in supporting the transaction (e), for in almost all these cases when the company is in a position to make an agreement, the consideration is wholly a past, and consequently not a valuable, consideration, and, as has been stated, the company cannot ratify acts done before its incorporation (f). The reasoning of Lord Cottenham, in Edwards v. Grand Junction Canal Co. (g), which might be cited as contrary to his view, has not been approved in later cases (h), and would appear only to apply to companies incorporated by special Act of Parliament. The dicta in The Madrid Bank, Ex parte Williams (i), appear to proceed on what has now been decided to be a mistaken ground, viz. that the articles amount to a contract between a company and its members (k). Moneys recoverable from a promoter can be proved for in his bankruptcy, and where there is fraud a discharge will not release such a liability (l). It would appear that an action of this nature can be brought against the executors of a deceased promoter (m).

Not only can actions of this sort be brought by the company or its liquidator, but where the majority of the company is under the influence of the promoters, a minority suing on behalf of themselves and all others can sue (n).

Transfers to a company have in some cases been set aside either as being fraudulent and acts of bankruptcy (o), or under 13 Eliz. c. 5 (p).

AGREEMENTS FOR SALE OF PROPERTY.

It is not at all uncommon for the promoters to enter into a contract before the formation of the company, with a trustee for the intended company, setting forth the terms upon which the company is to take over the property. This agreement, once the company is formed, should not be relied upon, but a fresh agreement should, when the company is formed, be entered into between the company and the vendors and all promoters (q), who are to be paid for services rendered before incorporation. If this is not done such persons may find themselves in great difficulty, when it comes to getting payment for their services, or for the property.

It is impossible for the company to ratify acts done before its incorporation, for it is now well settled that no one can be agent for a company not in existence (r). In some cases no doubt, where the company has, with the knowledge and consent of the vendors, taken possession, the Court will infer a new agreement between the company and the vendors, and that possession was taken pursuant to such agreement (s). But there are many cases where the Court will decline to make such an inference. Thus it declined to do so in one case where it was clear that the company took possession under the mistaken notion that it was bound by an agreement between the vendor, and a trustee for the company before its incorporation (t), and in another case (u), where an agreement for sale had been made between the real vendor and a promoter who had subsequently entered into an agreement with the company it was held that as the company's possession could be referred to the second agreement, the Court could not infer that the company's possession depended on the agreement with the vendor, and consequently that the vendor could not sue the company. In yet another case (x) the Court declined to infer a fresh agreement after the incorporation of the company on the ground that the acts of possession were slight, and the company's local agent was not authorized to enter into an agreement. The mere fact that the company's articles state that the company shall enter into an agreement in the terms of an agreement already entered into, does not amount to an agreement between the company and the persons, who are parties to such an agreement (y); such an article simply empowers the company to enter into such an agreement, but coupled with acts of part performance, it may be evidence of a new agreement in the terms of the agreement referred to in the articles (z). If no fresh agreement can be inferred the vendor will not get any rights against the company because it has used his property, with full knowledge of an agreement conferring certain rights on him, made between himself and the person who entered into the agreement with the company (a), unless he can make out that such rights created a charge or a trust in his favour (b).

There seems to be little object in having an agreement with a trustee for an intended company except perhaps in very exceptional circumstances—the better plan being to prepare an agreement, which the company, when it is incorporated, will enter into.

The Court will very rarely, if ever, grant specific performance of a contract to form a company (c). Where matters which are not mere matters of form have been left open, there will be no binding agreement and not even damages will be given (cc).

Not unfrequently where a business is settled and it is desirable to sell it to a company for shares or debentures, but the settlement contains no power to do so, the Court will sanction the sale (d), but it will usually limit the time during which the trustees may (if the limit is not extended) hold the shares or debentures. In such case a contract will be made between the trustees and all parties who are sui juris, it will recite the material trusts and the facts in full, will, so far as necessary, provide for the distribution of the purchase money, and will be made subject to the sanction of the Court being obtained. The contract which it is proposed to enter into with the company will be set out in the schedule. The sanction of the Court will usually be obtained by originating summons.

Section 7 of the Revenue Act, 1909, removes the limitation contained in this section to contracts or agreements made in England Scotland or Ireland.

Goodwill is property for the purposes of this section, but it may be locally situate abroad (g); it has, however, been held that an exclusive licence to use a patent in Australia, and an option to purchase from a foreigner land abroad are not locally situate out of (e) Instruments for the sale, transfer, or other disposition either absolutely or by way of mortgage or otherwise, of any ship or vessel or any part, interest, share, or property of or in any ship or vessel—are expressly exempted from all stamp duty by the second general exemption to the Stamp Act, 1891.

(g) Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Muller & Co.'s Margarine, [1901] A. C. 217; the word property in this section had been given a very wide construction. the United Kingdom (h). Equitable interests even in foreign land are within the section, the exception not applying to such interests (i).

An agreement by which members of an unlimited company were to receive cash and shares in a new company, and were in return to hold their shares in the unlimited company in trust for the new company—it being a term of the agreement that the old company was to be wound up was held to be within the section as being a sale of an equitable interest in the shares of the unlimited company (k).

A contract to give a declaration of trust would seem to be within the section (l), but a contract on the sale of leaseholds that if the landlord's assent cannot be obtained, the vendor will at the option of the purchaser execute a declaration of trust is not within it (m), though the declaration of trust may amount to a conveyance on sale (l).

Tenants and trade fixtures cannot be disposed of as goods or chattels because they are not severed from the freehold, on the other hand it would seem that they are not an interest in land (n), contracts for the sale of fixtures must therefore be stamped—and the purchase money in a proper case apportioned; but it would seem that these remarks would not hold good where there is a sale of fixtures with freehold or copyhold land—the fixtures in such case constituting an interest in land (n).

Where the contract contains provisions for the payment of the debts of the vendor, the amount of such debts must be ascertained, and for stamping purposes added to the consideration (nn), but this will not be so where the business is taken on from a prior date, and the debts incurred after that date only are payable by the purchaser (o).

Where money is payable under a contract if certain dividends are earned—there the contract will have to be stamped on the assumption of such dividends being earned—the exact amount payable being

It would seem, however, that an agreement to sell foreign property for shares in an English company may possibly be within the section because the shares are situate here: Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Maple & Co. (Paris), [1908] A. ascertained by means of the rules laid down in section 56 of the Act (p).

It would seem that where there is a provision that the purchase money shall be payable by instalments the agreement will be liable to be stamped on the whole consideration—under the heading of Bond Covenant or Instrument of any kind whatsoever being the only or principal or primary security for sums of money at stated periods for a definite period (q), unless it is an agreement which is subject to section 59 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and is consequently already chargeable with ad valorem duty in respect of periodical payments (r).

An agreement to sell to a company consisting only of the vendors is within the section (s). With certain exceptions which do not seem material for the present purpose, other agreements if under hand only are chargeable with a duty of 6*d*., and if under seal, with a duty of 10*s*. as a deed (t).

Where the purchaser has paid the ad valorem duty and before having obtained a conveyance or transfer of the property, enters into a contract or agreement for the sale of the same, the contract or agreement will be charged, if the consideration for that sale is in excess of the consideration for the original sale, with the ad valorem duty payable in respect of such excess consideration, and in any other case with the fixed duty of 10*s*. or of 6*d*., as the case may be.

Where duty has been duly paid in conformity with these provisions, the conveyance or transfer made to the purchaser or sub-purchaser, or any other person on his behalf or by his direction, will not be chargeable with any duty, and the Commissioners, upon application, must either denote the payment of the ad valorem duty upon the conveyance or transfer, or transfer the ad valorem duty thereto upon production of the contract or agreement, or contracts or agreements, duly stamped.

If any contract or agreement is stamped with the fixed duty of 10*s*. or of 6*d*., as the case may require, the contract or agreement will be regarded as duly stamped for the mere purpose of proceedings to enforce specific performance or recover damages for the breach thereof (u); but this proviso does not make a contract which bears a 10*s*. or 6*d*. stamp, duly stamped so as to enable it to be filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies on the returns of allotments required by section 88 (x) of the Act—i.e. where shares have been issued as fully or partly paid for consideration other than cash (y)—if the Registrar declines to register such a contract on the ground that it is insufficiently stamped, the proper remedy is to obtain the opinion of the Inland Revenue Commissioners on the point, and, if necessary, to appeal from that, and so a mandamus will not lie against the Registrar if he declines to register a contract on this ground (y). Where a contract which would require to be registered under the section is not reduced to writing, there the particulars prescribed by the Board of Trade must be registered (z), and in such case the Registrar may as a condition of filing the particulars require that they shall be adjudicated under section 12 of the Stamp Act, 1891 (a).

Where any contract or agreement is stamped with the fixed duty, and a conveyance or transfer made in conformity with the contract or agreement is presented to the Commissioners for stamping with the ad valorem duty chargeable thereon within the period of six months after the first execution of the contract or agreement, or within such longer period as the Commissioners may think reasonable in the circumstances of the case, the conveyance or transfer must be stamped accordingly, and the same, and the contract or agreement will be deemed to be duly stamped. These provisions do not alter or affect the provisions of the Act as to the stamping of a conveyance or transfer after the execution thereof.

Any ad valorem duty paid upon any such contract or agreement must be returned by the Commissioners in case the contract or agreement be afterwards rescinded or annulled, or for any other reason be not substantially performed or carried into effect so as to operate as or be followed by a conveyance or transfer (b).

Turning to the other provisions as to conveyances contained in the Act, they are contained in sections 54 to 58 (both inclusive), and sections 60 and 61 of the Act, and are as follows:—

(b) Stamp Act, 1891, s. 59 (5) and (6). This section must be read with s. 14 (4) of the Stamp Act, 1891, and accordingly any instrument executed in any part of the United Kingdom or relating, wheresoever executed, to any property situate or to any matter or thing done or to be done in any part of the United Kingdom is liable to duty under it; it follows that an instrument by which foreign property is conveyed in consideration of shares in an English Company will be within the section as relating to something to be done in England and possibly also as relating to property (i.e., the shares) situate in England; Inland Revenue Commissioners v. Maple & Co. (Paris), [1908] A. C. 22.

54. For the purposes of this Act the expression "conveyance on sale" includes every instrument, and every decree or order of any court or of any commissioners, whereby any property, or any estate or interest in any property, upon the sale thereof is transferred to or vested in a purchaser, or any other person on his behalf or by his direction.

55.—(1) Where the consideration, or any part of the consideration, for a conveyance on sale consists of any stock or marketable security, the conveyance is to be charged with ad valorem duty in respect of the value of the stock or security (d).

(2) Where the consideration, or any part of the consideration, for a conveyance on sale consists of any security not being a marketable security, the conveyance is to be charged with ad valorem duty in respect of the amount due on the day of the date thereof for principal and interest upon the security.

56.—(1) Where the consideration, or any part of the consideration, for a conveyance on sale consists of money payable periodically for a definite period not exceeding twenty years, so that the total amount to be paid can be previously ascertained, the conveyance is to be charged in respect of that consideration with ad valorem duty on such total amount.

(2) Where the consideration, or any part of the consideration, for a conveyance on sale consists of money payable periodically for a definite period exceeding twenty years or in perpetuity, or for any indefinite period not terminable with life, the conveyance is to be charged in respect of that consideration with ad valorem duty on the total amount which will or may, according to the terms of sale, be payable during the period of twenty years next after the day of the date of the instrument.

(3) Where the consideration, or any part of the consideration, for a conveyance on sale consists of money payable periodically during any life or lives, the conveyance is to be charged in respect of that consideration with ad valorem duty on the amount which will or may, according to the terms of sale, be payable during the period of twelve years next after the day of the date of the instrument.

(4) Provided that no conveyance on sale chargeable with ad valorem duty in respect of any periodical payments, and containing also provision for securing the payments, is to be charged with any duty in respect of such provision, and no separate instrument made in that case for securing the payments is to be charged with any higher duty than ten shillings.

57. Where any property is conveyed to any person in consideration, wholly or in part, of any debt due to him, or subject either certainly or contingently to the payment or transfer of any money or stock, whether being or constituting a charge or incumbrance upon the property or not, the debt, money, or stock, is to be deemed the whole or part, as the case may be, of the consideration is respect whereof the conveyance is chargeable with ad valorem duty (dd).

58.—(1) Where property contracted to be sold for one consideration

(d) Shares in a new company will usually be taken at their face value; cp. Alpe's Law of Stamp Duties, 12th Edition, p. 132, and s. 6 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Cp. Stamp Duties Commissioners v. Broken Hill South Extended, [1911] A. C. 439, a case turning on a colonial statute.

(dd) See also s. 10 of the Finance Act, 1900, as to covenants to do substantial repairs or relating to property conveyed. No extra duty is chargeable in respect of such covenants.

for the whole is conveyed to the purchaser in separate parts or parcels by different instruments, the consideration is to be apportioned in such manner as the parties think fit, so that a distinct consideration for each separate part or parcel is set forth in the conveyance relating thereto, and such conveyance is to be charged with ad valorem duty in respect of such distinct consideration.

(2) Where property contracted to be purchased for one consideration for the whole by two or more persons jointly, or by any person for himself and others, or wholly for others, is conveyed in parts or parcels by separate instruments to the persons by or for whom the same was purchased for distinct parts of the consideration, the conveyance of each separate part or parcel is to be charged with ad valorem duty in respect of the distinct part of the consideration therein specified.

(3) Where there are several instruments of conveyance for completing the purchaser's title to property sold, the principal instrument of conveyance only is to be charged with ad valorem duty, and the other instruments are to be respectively charged with such other duty as they may be liable to, but the last-mentioned duty shall not exceed the ad valorem duty payable in respect of the principal instrument.

(4) Where a person having contracted for the purchase of any property, but not having obtained a conveyance thereof, contracts to sell the same to any other person, and the property is in consequence conveyed immediately to the sub-purchaser, the conveyance is to be charged with ad valorem duty in respect of the consideration moving from the sub-purchaser.

(5) Where a person having contracted for the purchase of any property but, not having obtained a conveyance, contracts to sell the whole, or any part or parts thereof, to any other person or persons, and the property is in consequence conveyed by the original seller to different persons in parts or parcels, the conveyance of each part or parcel is to be charged with ad valorem duty in respect only of the consideration moving from the sub-purchaser thereof, without regard to the amount or value of the original consideration.

(6) Where a sub-purchaser takes an actual conveyance of the interest of the person immediately selling to him, which is chargeable with ad valorem duty in respect of the consideration moving from him, and is duly stamped accordingly, any conveyance to be afterwards made to him of the same property by the original seller shall be chargeable only with such other duty as it may be liable to, but the last-mentioned duty shall not exceed the ad valorem duty.

60. Where upon the sale of any annuity or other right not before in existence such annuity or other right is not created by actual grant or conveyance, but is only secured by bond, warrant of attorney, covenant, contract, or otherwise, the bond or other instrument, or some one of such instruments, if there be more than one, is to be charged with the same duty as an actual grant or conveyance, and is for the purposes of this Act to be deemed an instrument of conveyance on sale.

61.—(1) In the cases hereinafter specified the principal instrument is to be ascertained in the following manner :—

(a) Where any copyhold or customary estate is conveyed by a deed, no surrender being necessary, the deed is to be deemed the principal instrument;

(b) In other cases of copyhold or customary estates, the surrender or grant, if made out of court, or the memorandum thereof, and the copy of court roll of the surrender or grant, if made in court, is to be deemed the principal instrument;

(c) Where in Scotland there is a disposition or assignation executed by the seller, and any other instrument is executed for completing the title, the disposition or assignation is to be deemed the principal instrument.

(2) In any other case the parties may determine for themselves which of several instruments is to be deemed the principal instrument, and may pay the ad valorem duty thereon accordingly.

The ad valorem rates of duty payable on a conveyance on sale were originally fixed by the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891 (Title Conveyance or Transfer on Sale), and were as follows:—

They have now been doubled by section 73 of the Finance (1909–10) Act, 1910 (e), but that section does not apply to the conveyance or transfer of any stock or marketable security as defined by section 122 of the Stamp Act, 1891, or to a conveyance or transfer where the amount or value of the consideration for the sale does not exceed £500, and the instrument contains a statement certifying that the transaction thereby effected does not form part of a larger transaction or of a series of transactions in respect of which the amount or value or the aggregate amount or value of the consideration exceeds £500.

1. The vendors shall sell and the company shall purchase

(1) All the freehold and leasehold hereditaments respectively specified in the freehold and leasehold schedules hereto—but subject as to the freehold hereditaments in the second part of the said freehold schedule to the mortgage therein specified ; and

(2) All the goodwill of the said business and the full benefit of all trade-marks and the exclusive right to use the name of as part of the name of the company.

(3) All plant machinery stock in trade furniture implements tools chattels and effects now in or about the premises or belonging to the vendors in connection with the said business.

(4) The full benefit of all contracts made by or on behalf of the vendors or either of them in connection with the said business and now existing.

(5) All the cash standing to the credit of the vendors jointly at the Bank Ld and now on current account (g).

2. The said sale shall take effect as from the 1st day of January 19 and as from that date until the date of actual completion the vendors shall be deemed to have carried on and shall carry on the business on behalf of the company and the company shall accordingly on completion be entitled to the benefit of all contracts entered into on or after and to all the rents and profits of the said business and premises from the said 1st of January and shall bear discharge and indemnify the vendors against (f) This agreement must be filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 88 (1), (b)).

(g) The Stamping Authorities require that agreements for sale of moneys on deposit account shall be stamped in respect of such moneys ; but they do not require agreements for the sale of moneys on current account to be so stamped.

all claims and liabilities in respect of any such contract and against losses and outgoings of the said business and premises as from such date (h).

3. The consideration for the said sale shall be the sum of £50,000 which is made up as follows that is to say—the sum of £10,000 for the said freehold and leasehold hereditaments other than the freehold hereditaments specified on the second part of the freehold schedule hereto the sum of £5000 for such last-mentioned freehold hereditaments the sum of £25,000 for the goodwill of the said business and the benefit of the above-mentioned trade-marks and contracts and the right to use the name of the sum of £1000 for the fixtures affixed to the said leasehold premises and the sum of £9000 for the rest of the property forming the subject of this agreement.

4. The said sum of £50,000 shall be paid and satisfied as follows as to £18,000 part thereof by the issue of 60 debentures for £100 each in a form which has already been agreed upon and a copy of which has for the purpose of identification been signed by of to each of the vendors as to £21,000 further part thereof by the allotment of 7000 fully paid shares of £1 each in the capital of the company to each of the vendors as to £11,000 being the balance of the consideration by the payment of the following sums of cash to the said A.B. the sum of £5000 and to each of the said C.D. and E.F. the sum of £3000.

5. The title to all the freehold hereditaments shall commence with an indenture of conveyance on sale dated the day of 18 and the title to the leasehold hereditaments shall commence with an indenture of assignment dated the day of 18 and the purchaser shall not require the production of or investigate or make any requisition or objection in respect of the prior title.

6. The company shall within 14 days after the delivery of his abstract of title deliver a statement in writing of his objections and requisitions to or on the title or evidence of title or the abstract or this agreement to Messrs. the vendors' solicitors at their office at No. in the county of and a statement in writing of any further objection or requisition arising out of any answer to any objection or requisition shall be delivered to the vendors' solicitors within seven days after such answer has been delivered. Subject to any such requisitions and objections as are delivered in the manner and within the time or times aforesaid the title shall be deemed to be accepted and every answer to an objection or requisition is to be deemed satisfactory and any objection or requisition not delivered as aforesaid shall be deemed to be waived. For the purposes of this condition time shall be deemed to be of the essence of the contract and every abstract though in fact imperfect shall be deemed perfect except for the purpose of any further objection or requisition which could not have been taken or made on the information therein contained. If the company shall make any objection or requisition or raise any question as to conveyance which the vendors are unable or on the ground of expense unwilling to remove, or comply with, then the vendors may give the company notice in writing requiring it to withdraw or waive such objection requisition or question and if the company shall within 14 days after the delivery of such notice fail to comply therewith then the contract shall notwithstanding any intermediate negotiation or litigation be determined and the company shall return to the vendors all abstracts and other documents relating to the premises and shall not have any claim against the vendors for costs or otherwise.

7. The company shall on or before the day of next issue and allot the said shares and debentures to each of the vendors as hereinbefore provided or as he shall direct and on the said day the purchase shall be completed at the said offices of the vendors' said solicitors and on the company showing that such allotment and issue as aforesaid has been made and paying the balance of the purchase money as hereinbefore provided the vendors shall execute and do all such documents and things as may be requisite for effectually vesting in the company the property comprised in this agreement. If for any reason other than the wilful default of the vendors or either of them the purchase is not completed on the said day the company shall pay interest on the purchase money or on so much thereof as shall from time to time be unpaid at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from such day until the date of actual completion.

8. No further or other evidence is to be required of the identity of the property comprised in this agreement with that to which title is shown by the abstract than the descriptions in the documents themselves but the vendors will if required at the company's expense make a statutory declaration that they have for twelve years and upwards last past held and enjoyed the property in manner shown by the abstracts.

9. The property is sold subject to all easements quit and other rents and to all incidents of tenure affecting the same.

10. The company having had an opportunity of inspecting the several leases and tenancy agreements now affecting the property comprised in this agreement shall be deemed to purchase with full notice of the contents thereof.

11. If any error mis-statement or misdescription of the parcels shall have been made such error mis-statement or misdescription shall not entitle the company to rescind the sale nor shall it be entitled to any compensation [or but compensation shall be made to the company the amount of such compensation in case the parties differ to be settled by X.Y. of or failing him by Z. of].

12. Any insurance subsisting on any property comprised in this agreement or effected for the purpose of the said business shall be held for the benefit of the company subject to the consent of the office and to the purchase being completed and to the company paying a proportionate part of the premium but the company shall not be bound to keep up or renew any insurance.

13. For a period of years from the date of these presents the vendors shall not nor shall either of them whether solely or jointly with any other person or persons except on behalf of the company carry on either directly or indirectly or be engaged or concerned or interested in any business, having for its object or one of its objects the manufacture of motor-cars or parts of or accessories to motor-cars within the United Kingdom (i).

14. The company shall comply with the provisions of sections 88 and 93 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, so far as the debentures to be issued and the shares to be allotted pursuant to this agreement are concerned.

15. If the company fail to comply with any of these conditions the vendors shall be at liberty without being obliged to tender a conveyance to resell the property comprised in this agreement either by public auction or private contract and the deficiency if any on such resale and all expense attending the same or any attempted resale shall be made good and paid by the company as liquidated damages; and any increase of price on such resale shall belong to the vendors. AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE VENDORS OF PROPERTY AND A TRUSTEE ON BEHALF OF A COMPANY WHICH IT IS PROPOSED TO FORM (k).

AN AGREEMENT made this day of 19 . Between A.B. of in the county of and C.D. of in the county of (hereinafter called the vendors of the one part and E.F. of in the county of a trustee on behalf of a company which is hereinafter called the company and which it is proposed to form as hereinafter recited of the other part. WHEREAS the vendors have for many years past carried on the business of at in the county of in co-partnership AND WHEREAS it is proposed to form a company under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, with a capital of £ divided into shares of £ each, and a memorandum and articles of association in a form which has already been approved by the parties for the purpose of acquiring and carrying on the said business and for other purposes. NOW IT IS HEREBY AGREED between the parties hereto as follows that is to say,

(i) The vendors may not solicit their old customers even without such a condition, Trego v. Hunt, [1896] A. C. 7, even where such customers have dealt with them after the sale, Curl Brothers v. Webster, [1904] 1 Ch. 685.

(k) It is very rarely of much use having an agreement in this form; the best plan is to have an agreement prepared to which the company is expressed to be a party, and then let the company become a party when incorporated. This agreement must be filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 88 (1), (b)).

1. The vendors shall sell and the company when incorporated shall purchase (here set out parcels as in last form).

[Then will follow Clauses 2 to 15 both included with such variations additions and omissions as may be thought proper.]

16. On the company entering into an agreement in this the terms of this agreement the liability of the said E.F. hereunder shall cease provided always that if the company shall not on or before the 19 enter into such an agreement then either party may give the other notice determining this agreement and thereupon the liability of all parties hereto shall cease. IN WITNESS etc.

AGREEMENT TO BE ENDORSED ON ABOVE AGREEMENT FOR THE PURPOSE OF MAKING IT BINDING ON THE COMPANY WHEN FORMED (l).

AN AGREEMENT made the day of 19 . Between the within named A.B. and C.D. of the first part the within named E.F. of the second part and the Company a company having its registered office at in the County of (hereinafter called the Company) of the third part. WHEREAS since the date of the within written agreement the company being the company referred to in the within agreement has been formed.

NOW IT IS HEREBY AGREED between the parties hereto as follows :—

1. Subject to the modifications hereinafter mentioned the several parties hereto hereby enter into an agreement in the terms of the within written agreement and the provisions of the within written agreement accordingly shall be binding on the parties hereto in all respects as if the company had been in existence at the time of and a party to the said agreement but subject nevertheless to the following modifications, the date fixed for completion by clause of the within written agreement shall be altered to the day of 19 and clause of the within written agreement shall be so modified as to provide that the company shall have the option of allotting fully paid shares in the capital of the company to each of them, the said A.B. and C.D. in lieu of making the payments of cash provided by the said clause.

2. All liability of the said E.F. under the presents or the within written agreement shall henceforth cease and determine and he is hereby released from all claims and demands in respect of the said agreements or either of them. IN WITNESS etc.

OPTION TO PURCHASE MINING RIGHTS WITH A VIEW TO SELL TO A COMPANY INTENDED TO BE FORMED (m).

AN AGREEMENT made the day of 19 . Between A.B. of in the county of of the (l) This agreement must be filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (Companies Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 88 (1), (b)).

(m) This form may be easily modified so as to meet the case one part and C.D. of in the county of of the other part. WHEREAS the said A.B. is seised of or otherwise entitled to the mining rights specified in the first schedule hereto. NOW IT IS HEREBY AGREED between the parties hereto as follows :—

1. In consideration of the sum of £ now paid to the said A.B. by the said C.D. (the receipt whereof the said A.B. doth hereby acknowledge) the said A.B. doth hereby grant unto the said C.D. the option of purchasing the said mining rights for himself or his nominees.

2. The said option may be exercised at any time before the expiration of six calendar months from the date of these presents by the said C.D. sending through the post in a registered letter addressed to the said A.B. at his above mentioned address notice of his the said C.D.'s intention to exercise the same.

3. At any time before the expiration of the said period the said C.D. may at his own expense send any mining engineer or other expert to prospect examine and test the said mining rights and the said A.B. shall render and cause to be rendered to every such mining engineer and other expert every facility so as to enable him to properly prospect examine and test the said mining rights and to give a sufficient report as to the value of the same to the said C.D.

4. In the event of the said C.D. exercising such option the purchase price to be paid to the said A.B. shall be £ which shall be paid and satisfied by the allotment of fully paid ordinary shares of £ each in the capital of a company which the said C.D. proposes to form and the purchase shall be made subject to the conditions specified in the second schedule hereto.

5. (1) The said intended company (hereinafter called the company) shall be named the Company Limited or by some similar name.

(2) The Company shall be registered under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, as a company limited by shares with a memorandum of association enabling it to acquire the said mining rights.

(3) The original capital of the company shall be £ divided into preference shares of £1 each and ordinary shares of £1 each.

(4) The said preference shares shall confer a cumulative preferential dividend at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum payable out of any profits which may be set aside for dividend and shall also be entitled to priority on a return of capital on a winding-up, but they shall not confer any further or other right to dividends or to participation in the assets of the company on winding-up.

(5) The ordinary shares of the company shall each confer one vote, but the preference shares shall not confer any vote.

(6) The articles of the company shall provide that the minimum of a firm offer by one to sell to a person with a view of a company being formed. If the company is formed this agreement must be filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 88 (1), (b)).

subscription of the company shall be shares of £ each in the capital of the company.

(7) The articles of the company shall provide that the company may pay a commission at a rate not exceeding per cent. to any person in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe whether absolutely or conditionally for any shares in the company or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions whether absolute or conditional for shares in the company.

(8) The articles of the company shall not contain any restriction on the power of the holders of ordinary shares to transfer the same except in cases where the company has a lien on such shares and they shall not confer on the company any lien on fully paid shares.

6. The consideration to be paid by the company for the said mining rights shall not exceed £ of which not more than £ shall be payable in cash and the balance in fully paid ordinary shares and the company shall not except so far as they may be included in the above consideration pay any underwriting or other expenses down to the first allotment of its shares to the public.

7. At least copies of a prospectus complying with the provisions of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and offering not less than shares of the company to the public for subscription shall be issued not later than one month after the incorporation of the company.

THE FIRST SCHEDULE HEREINBEFORE REFERRED TO.

[Here set out particulars of mining rights.]

THE SECOND SCHEDULE HEREINBEFORE REFERRD TO.

[Here set out conditions dealing with title time for completion etc.]

ALTERNATIVE FORMS OF CLAUSES FOR AGREEMENT.

For Clause 2 of the Agreement.

The company paying and satisfying the purchase consideration is as from the day fixed for completion by this agreement to be let into possession or receipt of the rents and profits and is as from such date to pay and indemnify the vendors against all outgoings and liabilities of the property and business comprised in this agreement. If for any reason possession is not given on the said day then the vendor shall as from such day carry on the business as it has been heretofore carried on but at the expense and risk and on behalf of the company. If any question should arise under this clause then the same is to be determined by the arbitration of two arbitrators one to be appointed by the vendors and the other by the company and their umpire in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act, 1889.

Clause to be added after Clause 3 in cases where part of the property purchased e.g. the stock-in-trade is to be ascertained by valuation (n).

The stock-in-trade of the said business shall be valued as on the said day (o) of by of or failing him by and the sum ascertained to be the value thereof shall be paid in cash on the date fixed for completion by the company to the vendors and shall for all the purposes of this agreement be deemed to be part of the purchase consideration.

Clause to be added after Article 3 where the Book-debts are estimated as being of a certain Value.

The book-debts comprised in this agreement are estimated at £ . The company shall use all diligence for the purpose of getting them in but if before the expiration of from the date of these presents the company shall not have got in book-debts to the said amount then the vendors shall pay the company the difference between the sum actually got in and the said amount and on such payment or if the company shall get in book-debts comprised in this agreement to the said amount without any such payment being made the company shall reassign and reassure to the vendors all the then outstanding book-debts being part of those comprised in this agreement and shall do all things necessary for vesting in them the right to sue for and recover the same, and the vendors shall be entitled to get in and retain the same for their own benefit.

Clause indemnifying the Vendors against Debts.

The company shall pay discharge and indemnify the vendors against all debts and liabilities of or in connection with the said business existing on the said day (p) of 19 .

Clause as to Title to be substituted for Clauses 5, 6, 8, 9, 10, and 11.

The company shall accept without investigation such title as the vendors have to the property comprised in this agreement and they shall not be entitled to take or make any requisition or objection in respect of title or evidence of title or any conveyance or an abstract of title or this agreement or otherwise.

Clause as to Title where Property Foreign Land substituted for Clauses 5, 8, 9, 10, Clause 6 being varied to suit the circumstances.

The vendor shall make a good marketable title to the property described in the schedule hereto according to the law of .

(n) Clause 3 must be varied so as to exclude the property to be valued.

(o) The day from which the business is to be taken over.

(p) The day fixed as that from which the company is to take over the assets. Whether this clause is or is not inserted is of course a matter to be decided by the parties. The purchaser of an equity of redemption is, apart from any such clause bound to indemnify his vendor against the mortgage debt. Waring v. Ward (1802), 7 Ves. 332, 337 ; Dodson v. Downey, [1901] 2 Ch. 620. See also Mills v. United Counties Bank, [1911] 1 Ch. 669.

Clause as to Title where part of the Property is Leaseholds which can only be assigned with the Lessors' consent (pp).

As to such of the leasehold property comprised in this agreement as is subject to leases which can only be assigned with the lessors' consent the vendors shall use their best endeavours to obtain such consent from the lessors but if in any case or cases they shall fail to do so then they shall hold the lease or leases in question as trustees for the company and no objection or requisition shall be made by reason of such lease or leases not being assigned to the company (q).

Clause requiring Company to pay Expenses preliminary to its Incorporation.

As a further part of the consideration for the premises the company shall pay the costs of all parties of and incidental to this agreement and all expenses of the promotion formation and incorporation of the company including underwriting and brokerage commissions and registration and other fees and shall indemnify the vendors [and all other persons] against the same (r).

WHERE THERE IS TO BE A PROVISION FOR THE VENDORS TO BE DIRECTORS.

The vendors shall be two of the first directors at a salary calculated at the rate of £ per annum each, and each of them shall hold such office during the term of his life and all the provisions of the articles of association of the company relating to directors are hereby incorporated except such of them as are expressly made inapplicable to the vendors or either of them (s).

MANAGING DIRECTOR (t).

The said A.B. shall be the first managing director of the company and he shall hold such office for a period of years and he shall not be liable to retire by rotation during such period, but if he ceases to be a director in any other way under the provisions of the company's articles of association he shall ipso facto cease to be managing director. The said A.B. shall in addition to his remuneration as a director receive (pp) A company may be a responsible and respectable person within the meaning of such a clause or a lease, Willmott v. London Road Car Co., [1910] 2 Ch. 525.

(q) For other forms of conditions as to title see the ordinary conveyancing precedent books.

(r) See ante, p. 156, as to the necessity of this clause; only parties to the agreement can sue on it; see ante, p. 156.

(s) There should always, in the case of clauses like this clause, and the next series of clauses, be, in addition to provision, in the articles enabling them to be carried out, an agreement. This course has two distinct advantages. Firstly, because where the agreement is to last for more than a year it satisfies the Statute of Frauds, while the articles, even when signed by the party to be charged, do not do so. Eley v. Positive Government, etc., Co. (1876), 1 Ex. Div. 20, 88; Dale and Plant (1890), 61 L. T. 206, and secondly, because the articles of association are revocable and capable of alteration and it is desirable to have an agreement which cannot be altered. Cp. Baily v. British Equitable Assurance, [1904] 1 Ch. 374, reversed, but not on this point, [1906] A. C. 35, and see also Punt v. Symons, [1903] 2 Ch. 506.

(t) A separate agreement is often desirable.

as his salary as managing director remuneration calculated at the rate of £ per annum and also a commission at the rate of per cent. on the net profits available in each year for dividend. The said A.B. shall exercise and do such powers and things as the directors of the company may from time to time direct him to do and shall conform to such regulations as the directors may from time to time make (u) and he shall honestly and diligently serve the company and devote his whole time and attention to its business.

If the company shall wrongfully dismiss the said A.B. during the continuance of this agreement then it shall pay him by way of liquidated damages (x) a sum of £ for each complete year of the said five years unexpired at the time of such wrongful dismissal and a proportionate amount for any fraction of a year then unexpired.

CLAUSE WHERE THERE IS A DOUBT AS TO WHETHER THE CONTRACT WILL BE GOVERNED BY ENGLISH OR FOREIGN LAW.

This agreement shall for all purposes be deemed an English agreement and it shall be given effect to and construed accordingly (y) [and any proceedings hereunder may be served on the said A.B. notwithstanding he is not within the jurisdiction of the English Courts by leaving the same at the registered office of the company and posting a copy of the same to him at his usual or last known address] (z).

(u) Very frequently there is a clause restraining the managing director from carrying on business otherwise than on behalf of the company.

(x) It is inadvisable to have a clause imposing a sum as liquidated damages for the breach of all or any of the covenants in the agreement. The courts sometimes look upon such a sum as a penalty and not as liquidated damages at all. The fact that the sum is stated to be liquidated damages or a penalty, as the case may be, raises a presumption that such sum is what it is stated to be. Diestal v. Stevenson, [1906] 2 K. B. 345, but this presumption may be displaced as, e.g., in cases where the same sum is stated to be liquidated damages for breaches of the contract which are of varying degrees of importance. Where the sum is fixed for one particular breach and is in proportion to the amount of non-performance and is not very exorbitant it will usually be looked on as liquidated damages: Clydebank Engineering, etc., Co. v. Don Jose Ramos, [1905] A. C. 6, per Lord DAVEY at p. 16. For other cases on the subject, Commissioner of Public Works v. Hills, [1906] A. C. 368; Pye v. British Automobile, etc., Co., [1906] 1 K. B. 425; Willson v. Love, [1896] 1 Q. B. 626; Elphinstone (Lord) v. Monkland Iron, etc., Co. (1886), 11 A. C. 332; Wallis v. Smith (1882), 21 C. D. 243; Law v. Local Board of Redditch, [1892] 1 Q. B. 127.

(y) It is perfectly competent for the parties to decide by what law the contract is to be construed. Spurrier v. La Cloche, [1902] A. C. 446; Hamlyn v. Talisker Distillery, [1894] A. C. 202; South African Breweries v. King, [1900] 1 Ch. 273; British South Africa Co. v. De Beers Consolidated Mines, [1910] 1 Ch. 354, [1910] 2 Ch. 502; reversed on other grounds, [1912] A. C. 52.

(z) The company can be served under s. 116 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908: Watkins v. Scottish Imperial Insurance Co. (1889), 23 Q. B. D. 285, decides that a company registered in Scotland or Ireland cannot be served in England even when it carries on ARBITRATION CLAUSE.

If any doubt or difficulty shall arise in the construction or carrying out of or otherwise in relation to this agreement the same shall be determined by the arbitration of two arbitrators one to be appointed by the vendors and the other by the company and their umpire in accordance with the provisions of the Arbitration Act 1889.

CLAUSE GIVING EITHER PARTY POWER TO DETERMINE AGREEMENT IN THE EVENT OF INSUFFICIENT SHARES BEING TAKEN UP.

If at least shares in the company reckoned exclusively of any shares [underwritten or] payable wholly or partly otherwise than in cash have not been allotted before the day of next then either party may determine this agreement by notice in writing to the other and thereupon the company shall return to the vendors all documents in its possession relating to the premises and neither party shall have any claim against the other for costs or otherwise under or by virtue of this agreement (a).

UNDERWRITING.

Underwriting in connection with shares means agreeing to place (b), i.e. find subscribers for, or take so many of the shares specified in the underwriting letter, as are not before a certain date or event otherwise subscribed for. In return for this agreement the underwriter receives a certain sum, or more usually, a commission calculated on the total number of shares underwritten (c).

Before the Companies Act, 1900, came into force, there was some doubt whether a limited company could make such payments—it was settled law that it could not issue shares at a discount—and it was doubtful whether it was not ultra vires for a company to apply its capital in paying for the issue of its own shares (d).

Then came section 8 of the Act of 1900, which differed from the existing section in that it only applied on an offer of shares to the business there, probably a company could not contract itself out of this position. A person may agree for service on himself here in England even when he is out of the jurisdiction: Montgomery v. Liebenthal, [1898] 1 Q. B. 487; but he cannot empower any one to serve him out of the jurisdiction: British Wagon Co. v. Gray, [1896] 1 Q. B. 35.

(a) Having regard to the provisions as to minimum subscription and restricting a company's right to commence business contained in the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, ss. 85 and 87, this clause will very rarely be required now.

public for subscription (e). This section was amended by section 8 of the Act of 1907, which altered the law into its present shape.

It is now lawful for a company to pay a commission to any person in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, whether absolutely or conditionally, for any shares in the company, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, whether absolute or conditional, for any shares in the company, if the payment of the commission is authorized by the articles, and the commission paid or agreed to be paid does not exceed the amount or rate so authorised, and if the amount or rate per cent. of the commission paid or agreed to be paid is—

(a) In the case of shares offered to the public for subscription, disclosed in the prospectus ; or

(b) In the case of shares not offered to the public for subscription, disclosed in the statement in lieu of prospectus, or in a statement in the prescribed (f) form signed in like manner as a statement in lieu of prospectus and filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and where a circular or notice, not being a prospectus, inviting subscription for the shares is issued, also disclosed in that circular or notice.

Except in the cases above mentioned, no company may apply any of its shares or capital money either directly or indirectly in payment of any commission, discount, or allowance, to any person in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, whether absolutely or conditionally, for any shares of the company, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, whether absolute or conditional, for any shares in the company, whether the shares or money be so applied by being added to the purchase money of any property acquired by the company or to the contract price of any work to be executed for the company, or the money be paid out of the nominal purchase money or contract price, or otherwise (g).

Possibly if the original articles do not authorize payments for underwriting, payments made for that purpose may be retrospectively ratified by altering the articles, and by passing a resolution adopting the payments (gg).

A vendor to, or promoter of, or any other person who receives money or shares from a company has, and is deemed always to have had, power to apply any part of the money or shares so received in payment of any commission the payment of which if made directly by the company would have been legal under the section (g). Whether any particular payment does or does not amount to a payment

(e) For the meaning of these words, see the judgment of FARWELL, J., in Burrows v. Matabele Gold Reefs and Estates Co., [1901] 2 Ch. 23, at p. 27, and on the old section generally, see Booth v. New Afrikander Gold Mining Co., [1903] 1 Ch. 295.

(f) This would apply to private companies, as the section applies to them: Dominion of Canada General Trading and Investment Co. v. Bregstock, [1911] 2 K. B. 648. Prescribed means prescribed by the Board of Trade, see Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 285 ; for form, see post, p. 182.

within the section, where there is a sale to an intermediary, and then a resale by him at a profit to the company, would seem in all cases to be a question depending on the facts of the particular case (h). Where the articles provide for payment of commission at a certain rate, that will usually have to be calculated on all the shares underwritten (i). Such an article will not apparently authorize the payment of a lump sum, even where such sum amounts to less than the rate authorized (k).

The section does not authorize the sale of shares at a discount, and it has been held that a company which could pay a commission of 90 per cent., could not make an issue of 10*s*. shares, on the terms that each person who took shares was to be entitled to receive a bonus or payment of 7*s*. for each share taken (l). The reason of the decision was that the scheme was a colourable attempt to bring what was really an issue of shares at a discount within the section. It is very difficult, however, to see why the transaction was not protected by the section, seeing that it was within the express words of the section.

It was recognized in this case that the section protects transactions which cannot be described either as placing or underwriting shares (l).

An agreement on a reconstruction under which underwriters are to take shares not applied for by members of the old company, and are to receive a commission for so doing, is protected by the section, and it is no objection to such a scheme that such shares will be credited as paid up to the same extent as they would have been in the hands of the members of the old company, even though such amount works out to a larger amount per share than the company can pay in underwriting commissions (m).

An agreement by which a person is, in consideration of taking shares, entitled to an option to take further shares at a price not less than par was good before the Act of 1900 (n) and is not affected by the section (o). Such an agreement will not prevent a company going into liquidation, or entering into a reconstruction scheme before the option is exercised, and if the person who has the option exercises it he will only be entitled to have the shares in the form they are in at the date when he does so, and with the rights they then confer (p). In the case of Shorts v. Colwill (q) a person agreed to find persons who would take up the unissued shares of a company at a premium of £1 per share, he receiving in return a commission of 10*s*. per share, which was ultimately payable in shares. Warrington, J., held the transaction to be bad, because there was no offer of shares to the public. The section further provides that nothing therein contained is to affect the power of the company to pay such brokerage as was previously lawful (r). It was settled before the Act that a company could pay a reasonable brokerage to a person for placing its shares for it (s).

It may be here stated that as a company cannot purchase its own shares, any brokerage paid to a broker on such a purchase will be an illegal payment, and the broker can not only not recover moneys actually expended in the purchase, but it would seem that if he has been paid he can be required to recoup the moneys paid (t).

Underwriting contracts, like other contracts, require not only an offer and acceptance, but also that the acceptance shall be notified to the person making the offer (u); but there may, no doubt, be cases where from the conduct of the parties, it will be presumed that notice of acceptance was inferred or waived by the person making the offer (x), and it would seem to be sufficient if the underwriting

R. 541, the brokerage and commission were improper because they were made with a view to rigging the market. In Ex parte Chatteris (1880), 49 L. J. (CH.) 253, the brokerage was improper because the transaction was not bonâ fide and was made to a person in a fiduciary position, without full disclosure; see also West of England Paper Mills Co. v. Gilbert (1892), 61 L. contract has been acted on, and shares have been allotted under its provisions, before the offer is withdrawn (y).

In one case a person after offering to underwrite shares by a private letter made such offer conditional on its being accepted before a certain date; he was never notified of its acceptance, but was held to be estopped from denying that he was a shareholder, as the company without knowing of the letter had put him on its list of shareholders (z), and, of course, a person after shares have been allotted to him can by acting as a shareholder, prevent himself from setting up any defence there may have been on his contract (a).

Underwriting contracts usually contemplate an application by the underwriter for any shares he may have to take (b), and he usually irrevocably authorizes the person with whom he contracts to apply for the shares in his name, or sends an application form which he agrees shall be irrevocable, in such cases the authority being coupled with an interest is irrevocable (c); but where the agreement is to take or find persons to take shares when called upon, and in default the company is authorized to apply in the name of the underwriter for shares, there the company cannot allot the shares, until it has called upon the underwriter to apply for them (d). It would seem that where some of the underwriters make an application to have some of the shares underwritten by them allotted to them firm—i.e., unconditionally—this will relieve the other underwriters (e).

The section only applies to the underwriting of shares, and not of debentures, as there was never any legal objection to the underwriting of debentures; but sums paid for underwriting of shares or debentures, or allowed by way of discount in respect of debentures, or so much thereof as has not been written off, must be stated in every balance sheet of the company, until the whole amount has been written off (f).

FORM OF UNDERWRITING AGREEMENT (gg).

AN AGREEMENT made the day of 19 BETWEEN a Company registered under the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908 and having its registered office at (hereinafter called the Company) of the one part and the several persons whose names descriptions and addresses are set out in the first column of the schedule hereto (hereinafter called the underwriters) of the other part.

Whereby it is agreed between the parties hereto as follows—

1. Subject as hereinafter provided each of the underwriters hereby agrees to subscribe upon the terms of the prospectus hereinafter referred to for the number of shares of £ each in the Company set opposite his name in the second column of the schedule hereto.

2. Any shares in the company (other than shares which shall be allotted as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash and shares which shall be allotted under this agreement) which the company shall be entitled to and shall allot on or before the day of next shall be taken as being in relief of the liability of the underwriters hereunder and such liability shall accordingly be extinguished or reduced as the case may be and in the event of such liability being reduced then each of the underwriters shall as far as possible share in the benefit of such reduction rateably in the proportion which the shares set opposite his name in the second column of the schedule hereto bear to the total number of shares hereby underwritten.

3. As soon as the company has ascertained the number of shares which any one of the underwriters is liable to subscribe for hereunder it shall apply for and accept an allotment of such shares in the name and on behalf of such underwriter and each of the underwriters hereby authorizes the company to make such allotment and irrevocably appoints the company his attorney in his name and on his behalf to make such application and accept such allotment. Where any shares have been allotted under this clause the company shall forthwith notify the underwriter to whom they have been allotted of such allotment but the omission to give any such notice shall not invalidate any allotment.

4. Each of the underwriters has before the execution of this agreement paid to the company a sum equal to the sum payable on application on the shares set opposite his name in the second column of the schedule hereto. In the event of an allotment being made to any one of the underwriters hereunder the sum so paid by him shall in the first instance be applied in or towards the payment of the moneys payable on application and allotment on the shares so allotted to such underwriter and the balance if any of such sum shall be repaid to him. In the case of no allotment being made to any of the underwriters hereunder the sum so paid by him shall be repaid to him.

5. In consideration of the premises the company shall as soon as may be after the said day of next pay to each underwriter a commission at the rate of 5 per cent. on the nominal value of the shares set opposite his name in the second column of the schedule hereto.

6. If any underwriter shall put forward a responsible nominee or responsible nominees to subscribe for all or any of the shares which such underwriter is liable to subscribe for under this agreement then if such nominee or nominees shall apply for and pay the sum payable on application in respect of the shares for which he is or they respectively are so nominated the company shall out of the shares which such underwriter is liable to subscribe for hereunder allot to such nominee or nominees the shares so applied for or if such underwriter is not liable under this agreement to subscribe for that number of shares then all the shares for which such underwriter is so liable to subscribe and so that any such deficiency shall be borne so far as possible by such nominees rateably according to the number of shares they have respectively applied for. On any such nominee accepting any such allotment as aforesaid the underwriter who has nominated him shall to the extent of the allotment so accepted be released from his liability hereunder.

7. Any notice to be served by the company on any underwriter may be served either personally or by prepaid letter addressed to him at the address set opposite his name in the schedule hereto and every such notice shall be deemed to have been served within twenty-four hours after the letter containing the same was put into the post office and in proving such service it shall be sufficient to prove that such letter was properly addressed and put into the post office.

8. It is a condition precedent to this agreement that at least copies of a prospectus which has been approved by the parties and a copy of which has for the purpose of identification been signed by shall be issued to members of the public before the day of next.

To Esq. (one of the underwriters)

Dear Sir,

I have read the prospectus of the Company Limited referred to in an underwriting agreement dated 19 and made between the said company of the one part and certain persons of whom you were one whose names were mentioned in the schedule to such agreement of the other part and I have also read the said agreement and paid you the sum of £ being the amount payable on application on the shares of the said company, which I am or may be liable to take under this letter. In consideration of your agreeing to pay to me the sum of £ out of the commission payable to you under the said agreement I agree to take and I hereby irrevocably appoint you my attorney in my name and on my behalf to apply for and to accept an allotment of one-third (or the number nearest thereto) of the number of shares (if any) which you may eventually be liable to subscribe for under such agreement. It is a term of this agreement that the sum of £ so paid by me to you is to be applied in or towards the payment of all moneys payable on application and allotment in respect of such shares as are allotted to me under this agreement the balance of such sum to be repaid to me. All notices in relation to this matter may be sent to me at the above address.

Signed (the sub-underwriter).

I accept the terms contained in the above letter.

AGREEMENTS FOR LOANS ON THE SECURITY OF SHARES OR DEBENTURES OF A COMPANY.

Very commonly there is in these cases a simple deposit of the shares and debentures, with a verbal agreement that they are to be treated as security for the money advanced. Where no time is fixed for payment of the mortgage debt it is payable on demand (h), and apparently the mortgagee can sell at any time after the mortgage money is payable if it is payable at a fixed time (i), or if there is no time fixed, after reasonable notice. It would seem that such notice need not state that the mortgagee intends to sell on default, it will be sufficient that it requires payment of the purchase money (k), nor will such a sale be invalidated by the fact that the mortgagee has without fraudulent intent previously sold part of the property comprised in the security under the mistaken belief that he was the owner, or has sold all the property comprised in the security to a nominee for himself under the mistaken belief that he had power to do so (k).

It would seem that foreclosure can be obtained in cases where shares or debentures have been deposited (l), at all events, where the shares or debentures deposited are not transferable by mere delivery, as is the case with share warrants or bearer bonds. In the latter case it has been said that the deposit of the bonds amounts to a pledge and not to a mortgage (m), and that consequently only a special property and not the property in the shares or debentures is given, with the result that sale and not foreclosure is the depositor's remedy (n). If the contract in such case is one of pledge, as it has been treated in several cases (o), this is no doubt the law; but it seems extremely difficult to consider the contract to be different to that entered into in the case of a deposit of the certificates of shares or of debentures, which pass by transfer, both being dealings with choses in action, but the latter requiring to be completed by a transfer, while the former does not (p).

The question of how far a blank transfer may be filled in after execution is dealt with later (pp), as is also the question of notices to the company (ppp).

Specific performance of an agreement to lend money on shares will not be given (q), and it is thought that an agreement, even when it is made with the company, for the deposit of debentures to secure a debt, is not an agreement to take up and pay for debentures within the meaning of section 105 of the Act, and consequently that it cannot be enforced by an order for specific performance (q); it follows that it will usually be desirable, in transactions of this nature, to advance the money and deposit the shares, etc., in the first instance, and then to vary the agreement in the text by reciting that this has been done, and providing for the terms of the loan, and the powers of the parties as is done by such agreement. Transactions of this sort are also not within section 103 of the Act, and a condition which renders the security irredeemable or prevents the mortgagor from dealing with the property as freely after he has paid his debt, as he could before he contracted it, would therefore still offend against the rule which prohibits the clogging of the equity of redemption and be void (r).

mortgaged must be returned on redemption, and there is no Stock Exchange custom to the contrary: Langton v. Waite (1868), 6 Eq. 165.

(p) In Deverges v. Sandeman, Clark & Co., [1901] 1 Ch. 70, FARWELL, J., says at p. 74 that movable chattels capable of manual delivery as opposed to choses in action are the proper subjects of a pledge.

C. 253, where a clause, in an agreement for a loan on the security of shares, that the mortgagor would always thereafter use his best endeavours to secure that the mortgagee (a tea broker) should have the sale of the company's tea, was held to be bad after the mortgagor had paid his debt: Jarrah Timber Co. v. Samuel, [1904] A. C. 323,

The question of the reissue of debentures which have been deposited under such an agreement is dealt with by section 104 of the Act, and discussed under the heading of debentures. That section certainly applies to the sort of transaction now under discussion (rr).

AGREEMENT FOR LOAN ON SECURITY OF SHARES AND DEBENTURES (rrr).

THIS AGREEMENT made the day of 19 BETWEEN A.B. (hereinafter called the borrower) of the one part and C.D. (hereinafter called lender) of the other part.

1. The borrower shall forthwith hand to the lender (1) his certificate for the 1000 shares of £1 each numbered to in the capital of the Company Limited (hereinafter called the company) and now registered in the name of the borrower (2) the 10 debentures numbered to which are now registered in the name of the borrower and form part of an issue made by the company of 100 debentures each for securing £100 and interest as therein mentioned and (3) duly executed blank transfers of the said shares and debentures.

2. On the said certificate debentures and transfers being handed to the lender he shall advance to the borrower a sum of £1000 and shall hold the said shares and debentures as security for such advance.

3. The said sum of £1000 shall be repayable on the day of 19 and the borrower shall pay interest thereon in the meantime and till repayment at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. Such interest to be payable by quarterly payments on the day of the day of the day of and the day of in each year—and the first of such payments to be made on the day of next.

4. If the borrower shall fail to repay the said sum of £1000 and all interest then due under these presents when the same becomes repayable then the lender may at any time thereafter give the borrower one week's notice that he the lender intends to sell such shares and debentures or any of them and at the expiration of such notice the vendor may at any time before the said sum of £1000 and all interest then due thereon have been paid proceed to sell the shares and/or debentures referred to in the notice or any of them.

5. Any money arising from a sale under the last preceding clause hereof shall be held by the lender in trust to be applied by him first in payment of all costs charges and expenses incurred by him in relation to the sale or otherwise in relation to this agreement or the charge hereby created. Secondly in payment of all interest due under these presents where an agreement that the mortgagor should have the option of purchasing the debentures which form his security was held to be bad; London and Globe Finance Corporation v. Montgomery (1902), 18 T. L. R. 661, would seem a very doubtful authority since these two cases.

(rrr) This agreement will be under seal where the transfers are required to be by deed. It will bear a mortgage stamp. See infra, p. 484.

and thirdly in repayment of the principal sum hereby secured and the balance if any shall be paid to the borrower.

6. On any such sale as aforesaid the purchaser shall not be bound or concerned into the application of the purchase money or to inquire into the regularity of the sale but the remedy of any one injured by a sale wrongfully made in purported exercise of such power of sale shall be in damages against the person exercising the power only.

7. On any such sale the lender may fill in the transfer or transfers of the shares and/or debentures sold with the name of the purchaser or any person named by him and may present all transfers requisite for carrying out any such sale for registration—and the lender may also at any time after the said day of 19 fill in the transfers of the said shares and debentures or either of them with his own name or any other name he may think fit and present the same for registration, and the borrower hereby irrevocably appoints the lender his attorney in his name or on his behalf for the purpose of executing any further transfers that may be requisite for carrying out any such sale.

8. Any dividends or interest received by the lender after the said shares or debentures are registered in his name shall be applied in the same manner as moneys arising from a sale under the provisions hereinbefore contained and the lender may exercise any vote which may be conferred on him by such shares or debentures being registered in his name in such manner as he may think fit and shall not be responsible for any exercise of or for not exercising the same.

9. Any notice to be given to the borrower hereunder may be given by leaving the same at or by sending the same through the post to him at his above-mentioned address—and any such notice if sent by post shall be deemed to be duly given at the expiration of twenty-four hours from the time when a letter containing the same was put into the post box.

10. If the borrower shall on or before the said day of repay the said sum of £1000 and all interest and other moneys hereby secured then the lender shall hand back to him the said certificate and debentures and transfers—and shall execute and do but at the expense of the borrower all documents and things which may be requisite for effectually vesting the said shares and debentures in the borrower or as he shall direct. IN WITNESS, etc.

FORM OF POOLING AGREEMENT (s).

AN AGREEMENT made the day of 1909. BETWEEN the several persons whose names are set out in the first column of the schedule hereto of the one part and A.B. of in the county of and C.D. of in the county of (who and the survivor of them and the executors and administrators of such survivor are where the context admits hereinafter called the trustees) of the other part. WHEREAS the several persons whose names and addresses are set out in the first and second columns of the schedule hereto have respectively handed to the trustees the certificates for the shares in the Company Limited, the particulars of which are set opposite their respective names in the third and fourth columns of such schedule AND WHEREAS each of such persons has also handed to the trustees blank transfers for the shares comprised in such certificates NOW IT IS HEREBY AGREED BETWEEN THE PARTIES HERETO—

1. The Trustees shall sell such of the shares specified in the Schedule hereto at such price or prices not being less in any case than 25*s*. per share as they shall in their discretion think fit.

(s) The agreement must be under seal where the transfers are required to be by deed, see post, p. 289. It will require a 6*d*. stamp if not under seal, otherwise a 10*s*. stamp.

2. Except as hereinafter provided no such sale shall be made after the day of 19 and on any such sale the trustees may fill in the transfers deposited with them with the numbers of the shares to be transferred and with the names of the purchasers or of such other persons as the purchasers shall direct and do all things that may be requisite for obtaining the registration of such transfers.

3. No person whose name is mentioned in the schedule hereto shall before the said day of 19 sell any share he may now or at any time previous to the said day hold in the said company.

4. All moneys received by the trustees arising from any sale under these presents shall be applied by them in the payment of all costs and expenses incurred by them in connection with such sales or otherwise under these presents and the balance if any shall be divided amongst the persons whose names are set out in the first column of the schedule hereto in proportion to the number of shares set opposite their respective names in the third column of such schedule.

5. Any of the shares set out in the schedule hereto which shall not be sold by the said day of 19 shall be distributed and allotted among the several persons mentioned in such schedule as nearly as possible in proportion to the number of shares set opposite their respective names in the third column of such schedule—and each of such persons shall accept such of such shares as the trustees may pursuant to this clause allot to him—provided always that the trustees may at any time after the said day of 19 sell any of the shares set out in the schedule hereto which are then unsold and which by reason of the ratio which the total number of such shares which are then unsold bears to the total number of shares set out in the schedule hereto, cannot in the opinion of the trustees be conveniently distributed hereunder and the trustees may also after the said day of sell any shares which it may be necessary to sell to provide for any costs or expenses incurred by them in connection with any sale hereunder or otherwise under these presents and which they are unable to pay out of any moneys then in their hands.

6. Any sale under the last preceding clause may be made at such price as the trustees in their discretion shall think fit and on any distribution or sale under such clause they may fill in the transfers deposited with them in such manner and do such things as may be requisite for carrying such distribution or sale into effect including anything that may be requisite for obtaining the registration of any transfer.

7. All moneys received by any person named in the first column of the schedule hereto by way of dividend or otherwise in respect of any shares set opposite his name in the third column of such schedule prior to the ultimate distribution of shares under these presents shall be paid to the trustees and subject to the rights of any purchaser of shares shall be applied by the trustees in the same manner as if they were moneys arising from a sale under these presents.

8. The trustees shall as soon as conveniently may be after the said day of 19 render to each of the persons named in the schedule hereto a true account of all dealings and transactions hereunder and such account shall show the sum of money and the number of shares to which each of such persons is entitled hereunder and they may send to each such person such account together with a cheque for the amount of cash he is entitled to, by a letter sent through the post addressed to him at the address set opposite his name in the second schedule hereto.

9. Each of the persons named in the first column of the schedule hereto hereby appoints the trustees his attorneys in his name or on his behalf to execute and do all transfers documents and things which may be necessary for any of the purposes aforesaid.

CHAPTER IV.

THE CONTRACT OF MEMBERSHIP AND MATTERS RELATING THERETO.

EVERY company must keep in one or more books a register of its members and enter therein the following particulars :—

(1) The names and addresses and the occupation if any of the members, and, in the case of a company having a share capital, a statement of the shares held by each member distinguishing each share by its number, and of the amount paid or agreed to be considered as paid on the shares of each member.

(2) The date at which each person was entered in the register as a member.

(3) The date at which any person ceased to be a member (a).

Where share or stock warrants are issued the company must strike out of its register the names of the members holding the shares or stock specified in such warrants as if they had ceased to be members, and must enter in the register : (1) the fact of the issue of the share or stock warrants ; (2) a statement of the stock or shares included in each warrant distinguishing each share by its number ; (3) the date of the issue of the warrant. Until the warrant is surrendered the above particulars are to be deemed to be the particulars required by the Act to be entered in the register of members. On surrender of a share warrant the date of surrender must be entered as if it were the date at which a person ceased to be a member (b).

Where any shares have been converted into stock the register must show the amount of stock held by each member in lieu of the above-mentioned particulars relating to shares (c).

No notice of any trust, express, implied or constructive, may be (a) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 25. Non-compliance with this section will render the company liable to a penalty of £5 for every day during which the default continues ; and every director and manager of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits the default will be liable to the same penalty.

(b) Companies (Consolidation) Act, s. 37 (5).

entered on the register or receivable by the Registrar in the case of companies registered in England or Ireland (d). It follows that if a person gives notice to the company that he claims an equitable interest in the shares registered in the name of another person, the company is not bound to take notice of such trust, and may not enter notice of it in its register, and the company will not be liable for allowing the registered holder to deal with his shares without regard to such equitable interest unless at the time of registering a transfer, the directors registering the same actually know that the transfer is a wrongful one (e), but the section does not allow a company to advance money to a shareholder after notice of the interest of another person, and then by virtue of the doctrine of tacking or otherwise, to claim priority over such other interest (f). In a word, the section, while it excludes the rule in Dearle v. Hall (g), does not touch the rule in Hopkinson v. Rolt (h), and notice will affect a company in its character of a trader, though it may not affect it in its duty of keeping a register. A form of article has been framed with the view of excluding this latter rule, but it would seem quite ineffectual, at all events so far as non-members of the company are concerned, and this has been so held in Ireland (i).

It would, however, seem probable that if a company has a lien for calls which have not actually been made, such lien will prevail over advances made after the issue of the shares, but before a call has been made, as in such case the liability would exist before the advances were made (k). Executors or trustees, who can claim to be registered, may insist that their names shall be entered on the register without any notice (d) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 27.

(e) This seems to be the law, see per Lord SELBORNE in Société Generale v. Walker (1886), 11 A. C. 20: Simpson v. Molson's Bank, [1895] A. C. 270, the dicta of JOYCE, J., in Peat v. Clayton, [1906] 1 Ch. 659, seem inconsistent with these cases, but they were not necessary for the decision of the case. An entry in the books of a company that shares were transferred to a person in trust only gives notice of the trust referred to: London and Canadian Loan and Agency Co. v. Duggan, [1893] A. C. 506, a Canadian case where there was apparently nothing to prevent an entry as to trusts.

(f) Bradford Bank v. Briggs (1887), 12 A. C. 29; Rainford v. Keith, [1905] 2 Ch. 147, where the directors knew the certificate was with a friend of the transferor, but had a declaration, although one of them knew otherwise, that such friend had no charge on it. The company had to refund moneys it received as the result of the transfer.

(k) See the remarks in New London and Brazilian Bank v. Brocklebank (1882), 21 C. D. 302, and in Borland's Trustee v. Steel Brothers, [1901] 1 Ch. 279; it is not clear whether in the former case the company had notice of the trust at the time it made the advance—if of the character in which they hold (l). A company cannot, having regard to this section, claim rights—e.g. a lien—against a cestui que trust, where his trustee is registered (m). The register of members commencing from the date of the registration of the company must be kept at the registered office of the company, and, except when closed under the provisions of the Act, must during business hours, subject to such reasonable restrictions as the company in general meeting may impose, so that not less than two hours in each day be allowed for inspection, be open to the inspection of any member gratis, and to the inspection of any other person on payment of one shilling, or such less fee as the company may provide for each inspection (n). Joint stock banking companies are bound to show their list of shareholders to any registered shareholder during business hours from ten to four (o). Every assurance company which is subject to the provisions of Assurance Companies Act, 1909, and is not registered under the Companies Act, and has not incorporated under its deed of settlement section 10 of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, must keep a "shareholders' address book" in accordance with the provisions of that section, and must, on the application of any shareholder or policy holder of the company, furnish to him a copy of such book on payment of a sum not exceeding 6*d*. for every 100 words required to be copied (p).

Any member or other person may require a copy of the register or of any part thereof or of the list and summary required by the Act or any part thereof on payment of sixpence or such less sum as the company may prescribe for every hundred words or fractional part thereof required to be copied (q). Under this section a it had the decision would not seem to be law, although the dicta abovementioned probably are; see also Ex parte Stewart (1864), 4 De G. J. & S. 543 as to notice. The decision in Miles v. New Zealand Alford Estate Co. (1886), 32 C. D. 266 would seem clearly not law as it was decided on the strength of Bradford Bank v. Briggs (1886), 31 C. shareholder or other person may see the whole register (r), and if the company refuses to give him inspection, the Court will order it to do so, even though the motive in seeking inspection is hostile to the company (s).

With regard to companies registered in England or Ireland, any Judge of the High Court sitting in chambers or the Judge of the Court exercising the Stannaries jurisdiction in the case of companies subject to that jurisdiction may by order compel an immediate inspection of the register (t).

A company may, on giving notice by advertisement in some newspaper circulating in the district in which the registered office of the company is situate, close the register of members for any time not exceeding in the whole thirty days in each year (u).

Loose sheets tacked together and intended to be the regular register until a regular book is obtained, will apparently constitute a register if they contain the necessary particulars, and the entry of a name on them will be entry on the register ; but if the sheets are not intended to be a formal register at all, but merely a statement of facts to be transcribed into a formal register when one is obtained, they will not be a register (x).

The mere fact that a book does not call itself a register will not prevent its being a register, if it contains the matters a register ought to contain or the bulk of them (y), nor will a book which omits to number the shares which each member holds, cease to be a register because of such omission (z) if the shares are in fact numbered (a).

The register of members is primâ facie evidence of any matter directed or authorized to be entered therein (b). It has been said that a book which would be a register for other purposes may yet not be complete enough to be treated as a register under these provisions (c). It would seem that a company's register must be kept in England, Scotland, or Ireland, according to the place where the company's registered office is, and it cannot be kept abroad under any circumstances (d), though there is obviously no objection to a duplicate register being kept abroad ; but a company having a share capital may, if its objects comprise the transaction of business in a colony and if authorized by its articles, keep in any colony where it transacts business a branch register of members resident in that colony (e) ; a company keeping such a colonial register must give the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies notice of the situation of the office where such register is kept and of any change in its situation and of the discontinuance of the office if it be discontinued.

A colonial register is to be deemed to be part of the company's register of members (ee). It is to be kept in the same way as the company's ordinary or principal register of members (f) ; a copy of every entry made in it must be transmitted to the registered office of the company as soon as possible after such entry is made, and the company must keep at such registered office a duplicate of its colonial register which is to be duly entered up from time to time, and to be deemed to be part of its principal register.

The shares registered in a colonial register must be distinguished from the other shares of the company, and no transactions with respect to any shares registered in a colonial register may, while so registered, be entered in any other register (except, of course, the duplicate to be kept). A company may, subject to these provisions, make such a provision in its articles, as it sees fit, with regard to its colonial register, and it may discontinue its colonial register at any time. On discontinuing a colonial register a company must forthwith transfer all entries therein to its main register (ee). Transfers in a colonial register will be deemed to be transfers of property situated out of the United Kingdom, and will be free from British stamp duty unless executed in any part in the United Kingdom, and, on the death of a member registered in such a register, his shares will for the purpose of British duties be deemed to be part of his estate and effects situate in the United Kingdom for or in respect of which probate or letters of administration is or are to be granted, or of which an inventory is to be exhibited and recorded, in the same manner as if he were registered in the principal register, if he died domiciled in the United Kingdom, but not otherwise (g).

(f) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 35, sub-s. 2. Advertisements as to closing such a register must be inserted in a newspaper circulating where it is kept. Applications for rectifying it may be made to any competent Court in the colony, and such Court will have the same jurisdiction of rectifying the register as is under the Act exerciseable by the High Court. Offences by refusing or authorising or permitting the refusal of copies or inspection of the colonial register may be prosecuted in any Court in the colony having summary criminal jurisdiction : ibid.

To return to the company's main register: the Court may order the rectification of such register on the application of the person aggrieved, or any member of the company or the company if (a) the name of any person (h) is without sufficient cause entered or omitted from such register; or (b) if default is made or unnecessary delay takes place in entering in the register the fact of any person having ceased to be a member. On such an application the Court may order rectification and payment by the company of damage sustained by the person aggrieved (i) or it may refuse the application.

On an application under the section the Court may decide any question relating to the title of any party to the application to have his name entered in or omitted from the register whether the question arises between members or alleged members or between members or alleged members on the one hand and the company on the other hand; and generally may decide any question necessary or expedient to be decided for rectification of the register (k). The earlier part of this section first appeared in the Companies Act, 1856—and it was pointed out (l) that the section could only be intended to deal with simple cases between a company and its members, and that in other cases a bill in equity was still necessary—as a result section 9 of the Companies Act, 1857, which is substantially re-enacted by this section and the corresponding section (m) of the Act of 1862 was (g) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 36, and see New York Breweries v. Attorney-General, [1899] A. C. 62, as the liability of a company which transfers shares of a foreigner into the names of representatives who have not proved here.

(h) Apparently a partnership firm is not within this section, as it is not a person: Vagliano Anthracite Collieries (1910), 79 L. J. (CH.) 769; but cp. Dunster's Case, [1894] 3 Ch. 473; Weikersheim's Case, [1873] 8 Ch. 831.

(i) It would seem that the Court has only jurisdiction to award damages under the section, where an order for rectification is made: Ottos Kopje Diamond Mines, [1893] 1 Ch. 618; and see Skinner v. City of London Marine Insurance Corporation (1885), 14 Q. enacted, and a wide construction was given to the section as so amended in Re Swan (n). However, even after the passing of the Act of 1862, such high authorities as Lord Cairns (o) and Sir George Jessel (p) took the view that the section gave the Court no jurisdiction in cases where the relief sought was in the nature of specific performance. Turner, L.J., and other judges, however, took a different view, and held that the Court had jurisdiction in all cases, but that as the section provides that the Court "may," and not that the Court "shall," order rectification, the Court could decline to try on such an application cases which could not conveniently be dealt with on a summary application—e.g. cases dealing with complicated questions of fact—and this latter view would seem to be the one that has prevailed (q).

The Court will, on such an application, rectify the register in respect of shares which have been forfeited (r) if a case for rectification is made out, and it will also in such a case grant rectification in spite of the fact that the directors of the company are willing to rectify without an order (s), for an applicant is entitled to be protected against possible claims in a liquidation or otherwise. On such an application the Court will in a proper case order that the register be rectified by striking out the name of a person who has been induced to take shares by misrepresentations in a prospectus (t) and it will also decide questions between vendor and purchaser and mortgagee and mortgagor (u).

Where the Court thinks that the matter is not one to be decided in a summary way, it will refuse the application, but without prejudice to an action being brought (x).

R. 3 Ex. 180, but this was an exceptional case. In Askew's Case (1874), 9 Ch. 664, the Court declined to give relief under the section as there were charges of fraud which could more conveniently be tried in an action, and as the applicant, being a fully paid shareholder, would not be damaged by the delay an action would entail.

(x) Simpson's Case (1870), 9 Eq. 91; Ex parte Parker (1867), 2 Ch. 685.

It was held under section 35 of the Companies Act, 1862, which expressly empowered the Court to direct the Company to pay the costs, that on such an application the Court could only order the company or the applicant to pay costs, and could not order any other person who has been served to pay them (y), and that if the company had in a dispute between the applicant and a third party, who turned out to be wrong, sided with such third party, the company would be ordered to pay the costs (z), but if it had remained neutral such an order would not be made (a). This provision as to costs is not re-enacted by section 32 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908. It is thought that this omission, coupled with section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890, and order 65, r. 1 R. S. C., enables the Court to direct any party to pay the costs of the motion. In any case this rule did not apply to the costs of an appeal, and parties other than the company and the applicant may be ordered to pay these (b), and it does not apply where the company is in winding-up (c).

These applications may be made when the company is in winding-up, and orders may be made nunc pro tunc so as to take effect from the time when registration should have been made (d). The question of what will amount to undue delay, within the meaning of the section, would seem to be a question depending on the facts in each case, but it has been discussed in a variety of cases (e).

If the Court makes an order for the rectification of the register of a company which is required by the Act to send a list of its members to the registrar of joint stock companies—i.e. a company having a share capital—it must when making the order direct notice of the rectification to be given to the Registrar (f). If the Court makes an order rectifying the register, the name of the person, whose name is to be struck off, should be run through with a pen in the register, and a statement should be appended as follows: "By an order of the High Court, dated, etc., this name was erased" (g).

The application may be made by motion in the High Court or by application to a Judge of such Court sitting in chambers in the case of companies registered in England and Ireland, or by application to the Judge of the Court exercising the Stannaries jurisdiction in the case of companies subject to that jurisdiction (h) and by summary petition to the Court of Session in the case of companies registered in Scotland, or in such other manner as such Courts may respectively direct (i). The usual practice is to make these applications, when the company is a going concern, by motion in the Chancery Division; but the application is, where the company is in winding-up, made by summons. Where the company is in compulsory liquidation or is being wound up subject to the supervision of the Court, the leave of the Court to commence or continue the proceedings is necessary (k), and it has been said that applications even where the company is in winding-up should be made in the name of the company (l). Except where the company is in winding-up, these applications should not be assigned to the winding-up Judge (m).

In two cases (n) Kay, J., stated that motions to rectify the register in the Chancery Division should be entered in the general list and heard as actions, but this rule only holds good in cases arising out of misrepresentations in a prospectus (o); other applications under the section are usually heard on affidavit evidence (p).

C., and they must be served in the same way as a writ, and except where special leave is given, two clear days' notice must be given.

In one case, where a company wished to strike off a large number of names, Buckley, J., made the order ex parte to save expense, but directed the order to lie in the office for three weeks and notice to be given to each person whose name was struck off, and he further directed that such persons should within such time be at liberty to make applications to vary his order (q).

Where, owing to quarrels in the company, there was no director or other person to rectify the register, Kekewich, J., declined to make an immediate order empowering the applicants to rectify the register themselves, but he directed that the company should within four days after service of the order on them rectify the register (r), and he intimated that failing compliance with this order, he would allow the applicants to rectify the register themselves under O. 42, r. 30, R. S. C.

Further, any judgment or order against a corporation wilfully disobeyed may by leave of the Court or a Judge be enforced by sequestration against the corporate property or by attachment against the directors or other officers thereof, or by writ of sequestration against their property (rs). For the purpose of this rule an undertaking has the same effect as an order (rt). The word "wilfully" in this rule is intended to exclude only casual, accidental, or unintentional disobedience (ru). Applications for leave to issue a writ of sequestration are usually made by motion, though they may be by summons (ry), and personal service of the order which is the foundation of the proceedings is necessary except where it can be shown that the respondent is evading service (rz). On an application for leave to issue a writ of sequestration, solicitor and client costs will often be given, but not unfrequently the writ will be ordered to be in the office for a period (ru). Leave to issue a writ of attachment against a director will not be given unless he has been personally served (ra).

ORIGINATING SUMMONS FOR INSPECTION OF REGISTER.

Chancery Division.
MR. JUSTICE

In the Matter of the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908
and
In the Matter of the A.B. Company Limited.

Let the A.B. Company Limited a Company having its registered office at in the county of attend at the Chambers of Mr. Justice at the time specified in the margin hereof on the day of 19 at o'clock in the noon on the hearing of an application on the part of X.Y. of in the county of a member of the above-mentioned Company,

(1) For an order directing the A.B. Company Limited to forthwith permit the said X.Y. to inspect its register of members.

(2) And that the said A.B. Company Limited do pay the costs of this application such costs to be taxed.

Dated

NOTE.—It will not be necessary for you to enter an appearance in the central office, but if you do not attend either in person or by your solicitor at the time and place above mentioned such order will be made and proceedings taken as the Judge may think just and expedient.

Under O. 54, r. 4, F (7), a respondent to an originating summons for inspection of the register of a joint stock company need not enter an appearance. The evidence in support will be an affidavit showing that the applicant is a member and has been refused inspection—or, if he is not a member, that he was refused inspection on tendering 1*s.* or such less fee as was prescribed by the company.

Section 30 of the Act does not give a summary remedy for a refusal to supply copies, and it is thought that an action may be commenced by writ—and that at all events where the applicant is a member of the Company the formalities required in the case of a prerogative writ of mandamus need not be gone through (s). Possibly in some cases it may be possible to obtain such an order on a motion in the action.

ORDER ON MOTION TO RECTIFY THE REGISTER OF MEMBERS.

IN THE HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE,
Chancery Division.

MR. JUSTICE

In the Matter of T. & H. Saunders & Co. Limited.
In the Matter of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908.

Upon motion this day made unto this court for F. H. M. of in the county of G. E. M. of in the county of and T. E. M. of in the county of the executors of the will of T. M. deceased and upon hearing counsel for the above-named company T. & H. Saunders & Co. Ltd. and upon reading two affidavits of the said F. H. M. filed respectively the 19 and the several exhibits in the former affidavit referred to and an affidavit of A. C. S. filed the 19 and the several exhibits therein referred to. This Court doth order that the register of members of the above-named company be rectified by striking out the name of T. M. deceased therefrom as the holder of 100 ordinary shares numbered 401 to 500 inclusive and 484 preference shares numbered 1291 to 1730 inclusive and 2057 to 2100 inclusive and by inserting in lieu thereof the names of the applicants as the holders of such shares in the following order (t) that is to say F. H. M., G. E. M. & T. E. M. and it is ordered that the said Company T. & H. Saunders & Co. Ltd. do pay to the said F. H. M. G. E. M. & T. E. M. their costs of this motion such costs to be taxed by the Taxing Master and it is ordered that due notice of this rectification be given to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies by serving a copy of this order upon him or by leaving the same with a clerk at the office of the said Registrar and at the same time producing the duplicate of this order duly

The shares or other interest of any member in a company are personal estate, and in a company having a share capital each share must be distinguished by its appropriate number (u). A company cannot re-number shares which have been issued, without preserving the old numbers so as to preserve the identity of the shares, and to enable the ownership of each share to be traced (v).

Members of a company consist of subscribers of the memorandum, who are deemed to have agreed to become members of the company. The names of these persons must on the registration of the company be entered as members in its register of members; and (2) all other persons who agree to become members of the company, and whose names are entered on its register of members (x).

In the case of companies having a share capital, no subscriber of the memorandum may take less than one share and each subscriber must write opposite his name the number of shares he takes (y).

By signing the memorandum a person not only agrees to take, but actually takes the shares set opposite his name (z), and it becomes forthwith the duty of the directors to put him on the register for such shares (a).

A signatory to the memorandum agrees to take his shares from the company, and he will not free himself from this liability by taking shares, whether fully paid up or not, from a promoter or any other person (b). His agreement with the company is to pay for these shares in cash or in kind, and he may agree to pay for them by transferring property instead of cash to the company (c). It would appear, however, that a mere subsequent agreement to receive fully paid shares for property transferred will not satisfy the liability of a subscriber to the memorandum, there should be something in the memorandum or the articles or the prospectus, or the agreement under which the property is sold to the company, showing that the property transferred, is being transferred in payment for the shares in question (d).

C. 426; but by the Banking Companies (Shares) Act, 1867, commonly known as Leeman's Act, contracts for the sale of any share stock or other interest in a banking company (other than the Bank of England or Ireland) are null and void unless they show in writing the distinctive numbers (if any) of the shares or where there are no distinctive numbers the persons in whose names such share stock or other interest stood at the date of the contract. Persons inserting false numbers or names will be guilty of a misdemeanor. A custom on the Stock Exchange to disregard the provisions of this Act, is unreasonable and so will not bind a non-member who does not know of it: Perry v. Barnett (1885), 15 Q. B. D. 388.

A subscriber to the memorandum is liable as a member for his shares, even though he has never been put on the register in respect of them (e). Nor will his liability cease where all the shares have been agreed to be issued conditionally, and the condition has not been fulfilled (f), but if all the shares of the company have actually been allotted, and there has been no allotment to a subscriber, then the liability of such subscriber will cease (g).

In one case a subscriber who subscribed for a certain number of shares of a particular class, but who subsequently, because he thought it fairer, agreed to have and had allotted to him a total number of shares equal to those for which he had subscribed, but made up of shares of different classes, was held liable only for those shares for which he had subscribed (h). This case, however, has been explained to have been so decided, because it would have been a case of great injustice and hardship, if any other decision had been come to (i).

There is authority for saying that a subscriber to the memorandum will not be able to escape from his liability, where he has been induced to subscribe by misrepresentations, by taking proceedings to rescind his contract (k).

Where a page had been inserted in the memorandum after a subscriber had signed, he was held not to be liable (l), and the same result would apparently follow where any material alteration is made after the memorandum has been signed by the person whom it is sought to make liable (m). In one case (n) a person who had signed for fully paid shares, for which he had given no consideration, and also for other shares, was held not to be a member in respect of the fully paid shares, but this case is a very doubtful one, and would probably not be followed.

The first step towards a contract to take shares, except in the case of a subscriber to the memorandum, is an application by the intending shareholder for shares; where there is a prospectus, such prospectus is usually accompanied by a form of application. This is followed by the allotment of shares and the entry of the name of the allottee on the company's register (o); even then the contract is not complete until the allottee has been notified of the allotment which has been made to him; until such notification the application for shares may be withdrawn.

The allotment is almost always made by the directors in pursuance of a power in that behalf in the articles. An allotment, if irregular, is not necessarily a mere nullity, thus an allotment made by a board of directors which has not been regularly summoned, may, it would seem, be ratified by a second and properly convened board meeting, and after notification of the irregular allotment, a shareholder cannot withdraw his application, unless the ratifying meeting is unduly postponed (p). In many cases an article providing that the continuing directors may act (q) or enabling de facto directors to act, will cure the defect and make the allotment valid (r). A conditional allotment will only become absolute on the performance of the condition (s) or on the allottee's name being entered in the register, as, until one of these events happens, there will not be a complete contract; entry on the register, though it can and ought to be made by the directors, being, except in the case of subscribers, a condition precedent to complete membership. After a winding-up has supervened, it would seem that there are cases where even directors who have agreed to take shares cannot be entered on the register (t); (o) An allotment of shares is the appropriation of specific shares to the applicant and the entry of his name on the register, Spitzel v. Chinese Corporation (1899), 80 L.T. 347. See also Nicoll's, Tufnell's and Ponsonby's Cases (1885), 29 C. D. 421; Mosely v. Koffyfontein Mines, [1911] 1 Ch. 73, 84, [1911] A. C. 409. The retention of the deposit moneys by the company coupled with the return of the banker's receipts will not amount to allotment: Best's Case (1865), 2 De G. J. & S. 650, at p. 656.

D. 16, from which it would seem that a delay in making and notifying the second allotment which would apart from the irregular allotment be unreasonable, will not, having regard thereto, necessarily be so.

but usually where there is a complete contract, the register can, even after winding-up, be rectified by inserting the name of a person who has agreed to take shares (u). As a company is usually under no obligation to allot shares, in response to an application, the application for shares is only an offer to take the shares applied for or any smaller number (v), and consequently, until the applicant has been notified that his offer had been accepted, he is at liberty to withdraw from it (x). Nor is a director in any different position to any one else (y). There may be exceptions to this rule, as for instance, on a reconstruction, where a shareholder in the old company, applies for shares in the new company to which under the contract between the two companies he is entitled (z), but even this is doubtful (a).

Another case where notification is unnecessary, though it is scarcely an exception, is where the applicant has told an official of the company not to trouble to notify him if his offer is accepted. This really belongs to the class of cases, of which there are several (b), where a person has been appointed the agent of the applicant to receive notice of allotment. Informal notice will be enough (c). The contract to take shares is completed where the application for shares is by post (d), and probably in all cases (e) by the letter of acceptance being put into the post (f). Notice of withdrawal must be given and received by the person to whom it is given before the acceptance is posted, for no authority to send this by post will be assumed (g). It will not be enough to give the acceptance letter to a postman to post (h), nor will it be sufficient to post it to the local agent of the company (i); the notice will probably be sufficiently given where the letter which is posted is wrongly addressed, if the person to whom it is addressed is responsible for the mistake (k). It would appear to be immaterial whether the notice of acceptance once posted does or does not reach its destination (l). Notice of withdrawal may be given to the secretary of the company (m), or even verbally to a clerk temporarily in charge of the company's office (n).

Notice of acceptance of an offer to take shares must be given promptly after the application, otherwise the applicant will be entitled to repudiate even after receiving notice of his allotment (o). In one case the Court considered it doubtful whether a delay of two months was not too much, and held that having regard to the special facts of the case, viz., that the prospectus stated allotment would be immediate, it certainly was (p). In another case where application was made on the 8th June and allotment on 23rd November, the delay was held to be too much (q).

Two or three months' delay was, however, not considered too long for ratifying a previous informal allotment which had been duly notified (r).

In one case it was doubted whether notice of the stoppage of a cheque sent in payment of application moneys, was not notice of withdrawal of the offer to take shares (s).

There are certain cases where what purports to be a complete contract to take shares is in reality a nullity.

Putting aside the cases where the allotment can be challenged owing to some irregularity in the constitution of the board which allotted the shares (t) these cases would appear to group themselves under two heads. These are (1) the cases where there has in reality been no contract at all because there had been no real application for shares. The application for shares in these cases was not in truth the act of the applicant at all, and with regard to it he was entitled to say non est factum. Such were the cases where applications were made nominally in the names of infants (u), or married women (x); but, in reality, by third parties. In these cases it was held that there was no contract between the persons applying and the company. Another case coming under this head was the case of a man signing an application for shares in one company, having been induced to believe and believing that he was applying for shares in another company (y), and also the case where a man applied for shares in a company, and was allotted shares of a larger value than those mentioned in the memorandum of association he had seen, the company having consolidated its capital into shares of a larger amount (z). Other cases of this class are the cases where the parties were never really ad idem either owing to the application having been made conditionally and having been accepted unconditionally, or to the application having been made unconditionally and accepted subject to certain conditions.

Thus where there were applications to take shares on certain terms, and in accepting the application a new term was inserted, viz., that unless certain payments were made before a certain time, the shares would be forfeited, there was held to be no contract (a).

These cases may be contrasted with the case where the application was on the footing that £1 should be paid on application, and £4 on allotment, and the letter of acceptance dated the 6th September, stated that £5 must be paid in respect of each share before 15th September—here the only fresh term (if any) was one giving the applicant a few extra days to pay for his shares (b). A contract was held to be void where the acceptance was on the footing that £1 should be paid on application, and £3 on allotment, and in the letter of acceptance it was stated that an allotment would be made if the balance was paid in a few days (c).

In another case where a proviso was added to the application form providing that all the shares of the company must be applied for and there was an allotment, but all the shares of the company were not applied for, it was held that there was no contract (d), and the same result followed where the application was subject to terms being arranged and to power being given to the applicants to nominate directors and no terms were arranged and no such power was given (e).

(z) Gustard's Case (1869), 7 Eq. 438; in this case it is difficult to see why the applicant was held to be a contributory for shares of a smaller amount, the shares had been transferred before the applicant knew of the alteration and before the question arose. See also Henry Holden's Case (1869), 8 Eq. 444.

(b) Peek's Case (1869), 4 Ch. 532.

(c) Pentelow's Case (1869), 4 Ch. 178. This case was said to be very near the line in Peek's Case (1869), 4 Ch. 532. The correspondence treated the allotment as conditional and apparently the applicant, who had repudiated the contract as soon as he received the letter of acceptance, had not been properly entered on the register.

(2) The second class of cases are the cases where the application was subject to a condition precedent which was originally, either by reason of having been ultra vires the company or otherwise, impossible of performance, or which has subsequently become impossible of performance. Thus, in one case shares were applied for and the application was accepted on the footing that the applicant was to have a contract to supply goods and that his calls were to be paid by such goods, and there was held to be no contract (f).

These cases must be carefully distinguished from the cases where there is an absolute agreement to take shares, coupled with a collateral agreement, or a condition subsequent, which is bad. In such case the agreement to take shares will stand while the collateral agreement falls to the ground (g). Each case of this kind must be decided on the construction of the particular agreement, and no safe guide can be given as to what will and what will not amount to a condition precedent; but the fact that the applicant's name has been entered on the register to his knowledge and without any protest from him will be strong evidence that the case is not a condition precedent case (h).

Where there is an agreement to take shares coupled with a condition subsequent, the agreement to take shares will stand, even where the condition subsequent cannot be upheld, unless the company is in due time and before a winding-up takes place required to perform its agreement or rescind (i).

Among the condition precedent cases are, it would seem, the cases where a reconstruction scheme has for some reason or other failed, and the person applying has applied to the old company only, for shares to which he was entitled in respect of his holding in such old company (k). Where application has been made direct to the new company, there, even if the reconstruction scheme fails, it would seem the applicant will usually be bound (l).

A shareholder will not be bound by an agreement to take fully paid shares where his name is not on the register, and the company can only issue unpaid shares (m). Where a company fails to obtain a certificate entitling it to commence business, an allotment would be wholly bad.

But even where the agreement is void if the applicant's name is put on the register and he with full knowledge of all the facts does acts which are only consistent with being a shareholder in respect of such shares, he will be bound as a shareholder in respect of such shares. In such case the placing of the applicant's name on the register would seem to amount to an offer, and the acts done with full knowledge to be an acceptance of such offer. Mere acquiescence even for a length of time would appear not to be enough (n). But if the allottee transfers his shares (o) or attends meetings and accepts dividends (p), or on notice that shares have been allotted under a reconstruction scheme acknowledges the notice without protest (q), or it would seem acts as a director, if the shares allotted under such reconstruction scheme are necessary for his qualification (r), then, and in similar cases, the allottee will be bound. Where shares have been offered at a discount, the allottee will be taken to know the law, and in this, as well as in other cases where one of the conditions of allotment is ultra vires, although there will be no enforceable contract before registration (s), once the shares have been registered in the name of the allottee, and he has done acts only consistent with being a member, he will be taken to have agreed to take the shares, or, at any rate, he will be estopped from denying that he has so agreed (t). The Prospectus.

To obtain members other than subscribers to the memorandum, it is usual to issue a prospectus (i.e., a document inviting persons to take shares in the company, and setting forth the advantages of the company).

It seems that at common law persons inviting others to take shares in a company do not incur the same duty as those making a proposal for a policy of insurance (u), in other words, the contract is not what is called a contract involving uberrima fides (x), and requiring full disclosure of all facts, which would be likely to influence an applicant for shares. The rule would appear to be that a prospectus must contain no mis-statement, which if it were true would substantially add to the value of the shares offered for subscription (y).

Further, a prospectus may omit nothing which, if stated, would qualify anything which is stated therein (z).

There are some statements (a) which point towards a fuller disclosure being necessary, but it is believed that in all cases these statements are qualified by the context in which they are found, and that the true rule is that there must be no such suppression of facts as would amount to a suggestio falsi—in other words, an omission which, if fraudulently made, would give rise to an action of deceit (b)—will be required to sustain an action of rescission against the company (c). If a statement is true at the time when it is put forward in a prospectus, but becomes false before shares applied for on the strength of such prospectus are allotted, the company is bound to draw the attention of applicants for shares to the change of circumstances (d), and it would appear that it is not enough for a company to send with the letters of allotment a statement setting forth the truth, but not referring to the previous mis-statement, and not informing the applicants that they are entitled to withdraw from their contract (e). The company is bound to see that such a notice is brought to the attention of the applicants, it will not be enough to serve a notice in the way provided by the company's articles (f). A statement of opinion (g), or a statement of intention (h), is a statement of an existing fact.

(x) Cp. Ross Estates Investment Co. (1867), 3 Eq. 122; in this case it was stated that statements in a prospectus were required to be uberrima fides, and to contain a most complete disclosure of facts, but the learned judge went on to say that no statement might be substantially untrue, thus qualifying his previous remarks.

If any fact is wrongly stated or omitted, it will not be enough for a company to show, that some document referred to in the prospectus would, if examined, have disclosed the true state of facts, and the case will not be altered where the prospectus states that such document can be inspected, and no attempt is made to inspect it (i).

The Companies Act, 1867, was the first Act which required the prospectus to make any particular statement. The section (s. 38) is now repealed (k), but it is still important because some of the decisions on this section may throw light on the provisions of the later statutes.

The provisions of the section were as follows :—

" Every prospectus of a company and every notice inviting persons to subscribe for shares in any joint stock company, shall specify the dates and the names of the parties to any contract entered into by the company or the promoters, directors, or trustees thereof before the issue of such prospectus or notice, whether subject to adoption by the directors or the company or otherwise ; and any prospectus or notice not specifying the same shall be deemed fraudulent on the part of the promoters, directors, and officers of the company knowingly issuing (l) the same as regards any person taking shares in the company on the faith of such prospectus unless he shall have had notice of such contract."

The section in terms included all possible contracts made by the persons named therein, it included as well contracts made with the company and other contracts, executed and executory contracts, and contracts which before the issue of the prospectus had been cancelled. The only persons who could succeed in an action under the section were the persons, who, having taken shares, could show that they would not or at all events might not have taken their shares if the contract omitted had been disclosed (m), and this fact in itself practically limited the operation of the section to material contracts (n). In the result, material contracts and material contracts alone had to be disclosed (o).

It became usual to insert a clause in the prospectus and application form binding applicants for shares, to waive non-compliance with the section; but such a clause probably only covered unintentional and honest omissions (p).

The section, unlike those in later acts, only applied to a prospectus offering shares, and not to one offering debentures, for subscription (q).

The section gave no right of action against the company, but only against the promoters, directors, and officers of the company knowingly issuing the prospectus (r).

(l) A person "knowingly" issued the same when he had had or ought to have had knowledge of the contract in question; it was no defence to say that he had forgotten the very existence of the contract, Shepheard v. Broome, [1904] A. C. 342, or that he had not looked into the contracts, Watts v. Bucknall, [1903] 1 Ch. 766, or that he thought or had been advised that an omitted contract was immaterial: Twycross v. Grant (1877), 2 C. N. 29, it was held that no action under the section would lie unless the applicant could show that he would or might not have taken shares if he had seen the dates and the names of the parties to the contract.

This section has been, as already stated, repealed and a prospectus must now state the matters set out in sections 80 and 81 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908; but, of course, this section in no way abrogates the common law duties of a company as to making mis-statements or omissions.

The next statutory requirements with regard to the contents of a prospectus were contained in the Companies Act, 1900, these were somewhat modified by the Act of 1907, the provisions of which were re-enacted by sections 80 and 81 of the present Act.

Every prospectus (s) issued by or on behalf of a company or in relation to any intended company must be dated, and on or before the date when any such prospectus is published a copy thereof signed by every person who is named therein as a director or proposed director of the company either personally or by his agent authorized in writing must be filed for registration with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies. No prospectus may be issued until a copy of it has been filed. The Registrar of Joint Stock Companies may not register any prospectus unless it is so dated and signed, and the date on the prospectus will until the contrary is proved be taken as the date of the publication of the prospectus. Every prospectus must state on its face that a copy has been filed, and if a prospectus is issued without a copy thereof being filed for registration as required by the section, the company and every person who is knowingly a party to the issue of the prospectus will be liable to a fine not exceeding £5 for every day from the date of the issue of the prospectus until such copy is filed (t). This section (unlike section 81) would appear to have no application where the prospectus is issued after the incorporation of a company by a person other than the company or an agent of the company (e.g. where it is issued by an underwriter).

The object of this section would appear to be threefold. It ties a director to knowledge of the fact that the prospectus has been issued on a particular date, so that he cannot say he never heard of the prospectus or that certain mis-statements in the prospectus never came to his knowledge until after the issue of the prospectus.

(s) Prospectus means any prospectus notice circular advertisement or other invitation offering to the public for subscription or purchase any shares or debentures of a company: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 285. Cp. South of England Natural Gas and Petroleum Co., [1911] 1 Ch. 573; Sleigh v. Glasgow and Transvaal Options (1904), 6 Fra. 420. Under the same section the expression debentures includes debenture stock.

(t) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 80. The offence may be prosecuted under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, but in Scotland every prosecution must be at the instance of the Lord Advocate or a procurator fiscal as the Lord Advocate directs: ibid, s. 276.

It provides that a copy of the prospectus shall always be available to persons interested, and it gives publicity to the affairs of the company (u). In practice the Registrar before filing a prospectus sees that the memorandum with the names, addresses, and descriptions of the signatories, and the number of shares subscribed for by each of them is set out where this is required. He also sees that the names, descriptions, and addresses of the directors, or proposed directors are set out, and looks to the minimum subscription provisions, but he does not concern himself any further with the contents of the prospectus.

The Act goes on to provide that every prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company or by or on behalf of any person who is or has been engaged or interested in the formation of a company must state the following particulars :—

"(1) The contents of the Memorandum of Association, with the names, descriptions, and addresses of the signatories, and the number of shares subscribed for by them respectively ; and the number of founders or management or deferred shares (x), if any, and the nature and extent of the interest of the holders in the property and profits of the company ; and

"(2) The number of shares, if any, fixed by the articles of association as the qualification of a director, and any provision in the articles of association as to the remuneration of the directors ; and

"(3) The names, descriptions, and addresses of the directors or proposed directors ; and

"(4) The minimum subscription on which the directors may proceed to allotment, and the amount payable on application and allotment on each share ; and in the case of a second or subsequent offer of shares the amount offered for subscription on each previous allotment made within the two preceding years, and the amount actually allotted ; and the amount, if any, paid on the shares so allotted ; and

"(5) The number and amount of shares and debentures which within the two preceding years have been issued, or agreed to be issued, as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, and in the latter case the extent to which they are so paid up, and in either case the consideration for which those shares or debentures have been issued or are proposed or intended to be issued ; and (u) Any person may inspect documents kept by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies and have copies or extracts of any such documents or any part of such documents certified by him on payment of the fees appointed by the Board of Trade, which are not to exceed 1*s*. for an inspection, 6*d*. for each folio of a certified copy or extract except in Scotland, where the charge is 6*d*. for each page of two hundred words : Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 243 (6).

(x) The words in italics first occur in the Companies Act, 1907.

"(6) The names and addresses of the vendors (y) of any property purchased or acquired by the company, or proposed so to be purchased, or acquired, which is to be paid for wholly or partly out of the proceeds of the issue offered for subscription by the prospectus, or the purchase or acquisition of which has not been completed at the date of issue of the prospectus, and the amount payable in cash, shares, or debentures to the vendor (y), and, where there is more than one separate vendor, or the company is a sub-purchaser, the amount so payable to each vendor; provided that, where the vendors (y) or any of them are a firm, the members of the firm shall not be treated as separate vendors; and

"(7) The amount (if any) paid or payable as purchase money in cash, shares, or debentures for any such property as aforesaid, specifying the amount (if any) payable for goodwill; and

"(8) The amount (if any) paid within the two preceding years or payable as commission for subscribing or agreeing to subscribe, or procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions, for any shares in, or debentures of, the company, or the rate of any such commission; provided that it shall not be necessary to state the commission payable to sub-underwriters; and

"(9) The amount or estimated amount of preliminary expenses; and

"(10) The amount paid within the two preceding years or intended to be paid to any promoter and the consideration for any such payment; and

"(11) The dates of and parties to every material contract, and a reasonable time and place at which any material contract or a copy thereof may be inspected: Provided that this requirement shall not apply to a contract entered into in the ordinary course of the business carried on or intended to be carried on by the company or to any contract entered into more than two years (z) before the date of issue of the prospectus; and

"(12) The names and addresses of the auditors (if any) of the company; and

(y) For the purposes of the section every person is to be deemed to be a vendor who has entered into any contract absolute or conditional for the sale or purchase or for any option of purchase of any property to be acquired by the company in any case where either (a) The purchase money is not fully paid at the date of issue [publication in 1900 Act] of the prospectus or (b) The purchase money is to be paid or satisfied wholly or in part out of the proceeds of the issue offered for subscription by the prospectus, or (c) the contract depends for its validity or fulfilment on the result of that issue: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 81 (2). There need, however, be no disclosure of the amount of the purchase money payable under a contract between the person who sold to the company and a third party, if such contract has been completed—even though completion only took place a few days before the issue of the prospectus; Brooks v. Hansen, [1906] 2 Ch. 129. Where property to be acquired by the company is to be taken on lease the section applies as if the expression vendor included the lessor the expression purchase money included the consideration for the lease and the expression sub-purchaser included a sub-lessee: ibid., sub-s. (2).

(z) Three years in the Companies Act, 1900, but even under the old Act two years was the limit where the prospectus was published more than a year after the date when the company was entitled to commence business.

"(13) Full particulars of the nature and extent of the interest (if any) of every director in the promotion of, or in the property proposed to be acquired by, the company, or, where the interest of such a director consists in being a partner in a firm, the nature and extent of the interest of the firm, with a statement of all sums paid or agreed to be paid to him or to the firm in cash or shares or otherwise by any person either to induce him to become or to qualify him as, a director, or otherwise for services rendered by him or by the firm in connection with the promotion or formation of the company; and

"(14) where the company is a company having shares of more than one class, the right of voting at meetings of the company conferred by the several classes of shares respectively" (a).

The section does not apply to a circular or notice inviting existing members or debenture holders of the company to subscribe for shares or debentures whether with or without the right to renounce in favour of other persons; but it does apply to every other prospectus, notice, circular, advertisement, or other invitation offering to the public for subscription or purchase any shares, debentures, or debenture stock of a company, whether it is issued with reference to the formation of a company or subsequently (b); apparently a circular of which a few copies are printed or typewritten, and which is only given to the directors and a few other persons, for distribution among their personal friends, does not come within the section, at all events where it purports only to give information, and not to invite applications for shares (c). Where more than one prospectus has been issued, and one complies with the statute and the other does not, only applicants who have applied on the faith of the latter prospectus can complain (d).

The requirements as to the memorandum of association and the qualification, remuneration, and interest of directors, the names, descriptions and addresses of directors or proposed directors, and the amount or estimated amount of preliminary expenses do not apply in the case of a prospectus published more than one year after the date when the company is entitled to commence business (e).

Where a prospectus is published as a newspaper advertisement, it is not necessary to specify the contents of the memorandum of association or the signatories thereto, and the number of shares subscribed for by them (f).

(e) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 81 (8).

(f) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 81 (5). Sometimes one sees in newspapers advertisements issued by companies which Any condition requiring or binding any applicant for shares or debentures to waive any of the requirements of the section or purporting to affect him with notice of any contract, document, or matter not specifically referred to in the prospectus will be void (g).

Where an official quotation is desired, the Stock Exchange requirements as to a prospectus are :—

1. That the prospectus shall have been publicly advertised. This does not necessarily mean in a paper, but a reasonable number of copies of the prospectus must have been circulated.

2. That the prospectus agrees substantially with the Act of Parliament or Articles of Association.

3. That the prospectus provides for the issue of not less than one-half of the authorized capital and for the payment of 10 per cent. upon the amount subscribed. This 10 per cent. is not necessarily payable on application—it will be enough if the prospectus shows when it is to be paid. If shares have been allotted to vendors they are counted in the one-half and this provision merely requires the prospectus to show that such one-half has been issued or that it is intended to issue it immediately. The provision has, moreover, no application to debentures or debenture stock. But even in the case of these securities if an insufficient proportion of the total issue is to be issued it may cause difficulty in getting an official quotation.

4. In cases where a company has sold an issue of debentures or debenture stock which is subsequently offered to the public for subscription either by the company or any subsequent purchaser, the prospectus must state the authority for the issue and all conditions of sale. This rule is to meet the case of a sale of debentures or debenture stock to a bank or some person without disclosing the price paid by the purchaser. It will be necessary to state the price paid by the purchaser and who is issuing the debentures or debenture stock.

In order to comply with the Stock Exchange Rules it is necessary that two-thirds of the amount proposed to be issued (h) of any class of shares or securities whether such issue be the whole or a part of the authorized amount has been applied for by and unconditionally allotted to the public—shares or securities granted in lieu of money payments not being considered to form a part of such public allotment—and the articles, trust deed, if any, and certificate or bond are in an approved form (hh).

The Stock Exchange authorities will also have to be satisfied that the requirements of the Act have been complied with, but they will not insist on the memorandum of Association being set out in cases where the Act does not require it.

propose to issue shares, which do not contain the statutory requirements and state that the publication is for information only and that applicants must apply to the company for the full prospectus, such advertisements should never contain an application form, but do not appear to be contary to the Act.

(g) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 81 (4).

(h) The amount proposed to be issued will include vendors' shares.

(hh) See the Stock Exchange Rules and appendices set out in the Appendix to this book (pp. 1508 et seq.) as to the steps to be taken where a special settlement or an official quotation is sought.

STATEMENT IN LIEU OF A PROSPECTUS.

Companies which do not issue a prospectus on or with reference to their formation, which have not allotted shares or debentures before the 1st July, 1908, and which are not private companies (i), may not allot any of their shares or debentures unless before the first allotment of either shares or debentures there has been filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies a statement in lieu of a prospectus signed by every person who is named therein as a director of the company or by his agent authorised in writing. Such statement to be in the form and containing the particulars set out in the second schedule to the Act (k). The Registrar will not file a statement in lieu of a prospectus unless every point in such form is dealt with either by a definite affirmative statement or by a negative statement, and he is bound in this case to see the statute is complied with.

A private company may, subject to anything contained in its memorandum or articles, by passing a special resolution and by filing with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies such a statement in lieu of prospectus as the company, if a public company, would have had to file before allotting any of its shares or debentures together with such a statutory declaration as the company would have had to file before commencing business turn itself into a public company (l). As has already been pointed out, these provisions are far from easy to understand, but it is thought that the special resolution required need not expressly convert the company into a public company (though no doubt this is desirable), but need only change the articles in such a way that they cease to comply with section 121 (1) of the Act. Presumably, neither the statement in lieu of a prospectus nor the statutory declaration will have to be filed by a company registered before the 1st July, 1908, and subsequently converted into a private company (ll), though perhaps it will be otherwise in the case of a company originally formed as a public company after that date.

A company may not, previously to the statutory meeting, vary the terms of a contract referred to in the prospectus or statement in lieu of a prospectus except subject to the approval of the statutory meeting (m).

MINIMUM SUBSCRIPTION.

The first class of voidable contracts to be dealt with is the class where the company has no right to make an allotment.

(1) On the first allotment by a company of shares offered to the public (n) for subscription; and (2) in the case of a company which does not issue any invitation to the public to subscribe for its shares, and which is not a private company (o), on the first allotment of share capital payable in cash no allotment may be made unless certain provisions are complied with. They are to the following effect:—

In the case of a company offering shares to the public no allotment may be made of any share capital offered to the public for subscription unless the amount (if any) fixed by the memorandum or articles of association and named in the prospectus (p) as the minimum subscription upon which the directors may proceed to allotment (q), or if no amount is so fixed and named, then the whole amount of the share capital so offered for subscription has been subscribed, and the sum payable on application, which must not be less than 5 per cent. of the nominal amount of each share of the amount so fixed and named, or of the whole amount offered, has been paid to and received by the company in cash (r). The amount to be subscribed is called the minimum subscription, and it must be reckoned exclusively of any amount payable otherwise than in cash.

If these conditions are not complied with on the expiration of forty days after the first issue of the prospectus, all money received from applicants for shares must forthwith be repaid to them without interest, and if any such money is not so repaid within forty-eight days after the issue of the prospectus, the directors of the company will be jointly and severally liable to repay that money with interest

(o) A private company is a company which by its articles (1) restricts the right to transfer its shares, and (2) limits the number of its members (exclusive of persons who are in the employment of the company) to fifty, and (3) prohibits any invitation to the public to subscribe for any shares or debentures of the company: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 121.

(p) It must be expressly stated in the prospectus, on the strength of which the applicant complaining took shares: Roussell v. Burnham, [1909] 1 Ch. 127.

(q) An article which provides that the minimum subscription shall be a given percentage (e.g. 50 per cent.) of any shares offered will be sufficient: West Yorkshire Darracq (1909), 25 T. L. R. 77.

(r) The receipt of a cheque is not payment in cash, at all events where it is dishonoured afterwards: Mears v. West Canadian, etc., Pulp Co., [1905] 2 Ch. 353, or where it is not presented at once, but is held over for a few days: National Motor Mail Coach Co., [1908] 2 Ch. 228; cp. Glasgow Pavilion v. Motherwell (1903), 6 Fraser, 116—where cheques received after banking hours were cashed the next day, and were held to amount to a payment when received. It would appear that directors when allotting shares should examine the company's pass book to see that all cheques received have been honoured: Truman's Case, [1894] 3 Ch. 272.

at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum from the expiration of such forty-eight days; but any director who can prove that the money has been lost, and that such loss was not due to any negligence or misconduct on his part, will escape liability. Conditions requiring applicants to waive compliance, with any of these provisions, or with the provisions next mentioned are void. The section except sub-section (3) requiring the amount payable on application to be not less than 5 per cent. of the nominal amount of each share does not apply to any allotment of shares subsequent to the first allotment of shares offered to the public for subscription (s). Companies, other than private companies, which do not issue any invitation to the public to subscribe for their shares, may not on the first allotment of share capital payable in cash (t) allot any shares unless the minimum subscription—i.e. either (1) the amount if any fixed by the memorandum or articles, and named in the statement in lieu of a prospectus as the minimum subscription upon which the directors may proceed to allotment; or (2) if no amount is so fixed and named then the whole amount of the share capital other than that issued as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash has been subscribed, and an amount not less than five per cent. of the nominal amount of each share payable in cash has been paid to and received by the company (u).

In the case of shares not offered for subscription, there is no specific time within which application moneys must in the absence of a right to allot be returned; but it would seem that the remedy in such case is under the provisions of the following section (section 86), though, no doubt, it is the duty of the directors to return moneys received without making any allotment.

A person who has taken shares on the strength of an offer made before the incorporation of the company cannot avail himself of these provisions to avoid his contract (x), and the same remark applies to a subscriber to the memorandum, for his contract is complete without allotment, and therefore he is also not helped by the provisions of the succeeding section which deal with the case of wrongful allotment (y). Where the company has issued two prospectuses, one of which does, and one of which does not comply with these provisions, a person who has taken shares on the strength of the incomplete prospectus, will have the rights given by the section in cases where no minimum subscription is fixed by the prospectus (z).

(t) These provisions do not apply if the allotment was made before the 1st July, 1908. As above stated, they also cannot be waived.

It is provided by the next section that in case of an allotment in contravention of the provisions of the preceding section, the allotment will be voidable at the instance of the applicant within one month after the holding of the statutory meeting of the company (a), and not later, and that it will be so voidable notwithstanding the winding-up of the company.

The remedy under section 85 of the Act is apparently gone once there has been an allotment, even though it was a wrongful one, and a company cannot avoid a wrongful allotment unless the allottee demands that they shall do so (b).

The Act also provides (a) that any director who has knowingly (c) contravened or permitted or authorized the contravention of any such provisions, with respect to allotment, shall be liable to compensate the company and the allottee for any loss damages or costs which the company or the allottee may have sustained or incurred thereby (d). Proceedings to enforce such liability must be commenced within two years after the allotment.

The date when the company must be in a position to go to allotment is the actual date of allotment, and it will be no defence, where there has been an irregular allotment, to show that within a few days or hours of the allotment the company did make an allotment which, coupled with the previous allotment, would if it had been made at the time of the previous allotment have complied with the minimum subscription provisions, or that it was in a position to make a sufficient allotment at the time of the irregular allotment.

Thus where the company had its issue underwritten, and had subsequently allotted the shares to the extent of the minimum subscription to applicants, some of whom paid their application moneys by cheques which were subsequently dishonoured, an allotment to the plaintiff was avoided, although the underwriters were ready to take up the requisite shares (e). Nor will the allotment be good if

(a) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 86 : it is not necessary that actual proceedings should be commenced within the month—it is enough if notice of intention to avoid the allotment is given within the month—and proceedings are taken as soon as it is clear that the directors of the company do not intend to remove the applicant's name : National Motor Mail Coach Co., [1908] 2 Ch. 228.

(d) The amount of such compensation will probably not be limited to the amount by which the shares applied for fall short of the minimum subscription : Daily Events Co., Times Newspaper, 2nd March, 1911.

(e) Mears v. West Canada Pulp, etc., Co., [1905] 2 Ch. 353. This case and the one cited in note (f), infra, would appear to throw doubt some of the payments are made by cheques which have not been cashed at the date of the allotment, but which after being held over some days are ultimately honoured (f).

It is submitted that shares allotted under a void contract would not count for the purposes of the minimum subscription, but that shares allotted under a voidable contract would count, for there the contract is good until proceedings are taken to set it aside.

Where the company does not have a statutory meeting, being a company incorporated before 1901, or it is submitted where the allotment is made after the statutory meeting, as may happen in the case of a company which does not originally offer its shares to the public, an irregular allotment may be set aside in the same way as an ordinary voidable contract, viz. if proceedings are taken as soon as the irregularity is discovered and before winding-up (g).

The Act does not provide any way in which a statement in lieu of a prospectus can be altered, and it would therefore appear that a company which does not offer its shares to the public cannot alter its minimum subscription, and receive fresh applications on the basis of such altered minimum subscription. Of course, however, it is always open to such a company to offer its shares to the public, and it would seem that it could convert itself into a private company. A company offering its shares to the public will have to comply with the provisions relating to companies offering their shares to the public, even where there has been a previous allotment.

A practical question sometimes arises as to the position of the bankers of a company which offers shares to the public, where they have received application moneys, and the company is not at the expiration of forty days in a position to go to allotment. Must the bankers in such case, where they know the facts, honour the cheques of the directors, or should they return the moneys to the applicants or insist that all cheques until the claims of all the applicants for shares have been satisfied should be in favour of such applicants? Apart from the statute, moneys so paid would not be subject to any trust in favour of the applicants, in the event of the contract not going through (h), and consequently there would be no lien in their favour. The statute says that "all moneys received from applicants for shares shall forthwith be repaid," and proceeds to impose a penalty (payment of interest) on directors who fail to make such repayment. It is thought that these words do impose a trust on the Scotch Case, Glasgow Pavilion v. Motherwell (1903), 6 Fraser, 116, which decides that payment of the application moneys by cheque is a payment in cash within the meaning of the section, where all the cheques are subsequently honoured.

or lien, and that a bank having received moneys from a company need not honour their cheques until there has been an allotment and the company has obtained a certificate entitling it to commence business (hh). If this view is right, an injunction restraining dealings with such moneys will lie against the bank or the company or its directors (i).

Where an official quotation on the Stock Exchange is required, such quotation will not be granted unless two-thirds of the amount proposed to be issued of any class of shares or securities, whether such issue be the whole or a part of the authorized amount, shall have been applied for and unconditionally allotted to the public, shares or securities granted in lieu of money payments not being considered to form a part of such public allotment (k).

MISREPRESENTATIONS AND VOIDABLE CONTRACTS.

Persons who have been induced to take shares in companies by misrepresentations in a prospectus may have a remedy both against the company whose shares they have taken and against the directors or other persons actually responsible for the prospectus.

A person seeking relief against the company must in all cases seek rescission of his contract to take shares; for while he remains a shareholder of the company he cannot obtain damages against it either in an action based on fraud or misrepresentation (l), or in an action based on breach of contract (m). When a person obtains relief by way of rescission, he will also obtain an order for return of any moneys he has paid in respect of his shares, together with interest on such moneys at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum down to the date of repayment; such interest is not given as damages (n). Where an action for rescission is pending, the Court will restrain the company from forfeiting the shares for non-payment of calls, at all events where the plaintiff pays the amount of the calls with interest into Court, and enters into the usual undertaking in damages (o).

(i) See Mears v. West Canada Pulp, etc., Co., [1905] 2 Ch. 353; but it would seem to be otherwise where the company is entitled to commence business and there has been an allotment, and if a company has wrongfully allotted it cannot of its own initiative avoid the allotment: Burton v. Bevan, [1908] 2 Ch. 240.

(CH.) 327, but the court will not in such case restrain the company from bringing an action for calls: Tatham v. Palace Restaurants (1909), 53 Sol. J. 743.

Whether a shareholder who has obtained rescission could in a proper case obtain in addition damages in an action of deceit does not appear to have been decided, but on principle there does not seem to be any reason why he should not be so entitled (p).

At common law a person seeking this relief must be prepared to show that (1) a material misrepresentation has been made to him or that some statement made to him was substantially untrue owing to the absence of some qualifying statement, (2) that the company was responsible for such statement, or at all events that it was not in a position to take the benefit of such misstatement, and (3) that he, the applicant for relief, was induced by such misstatement or omission to take his shares.

(1) The misstatement or omission must be one of an existing fact, though of course a man may tell an untruth about the state of his opinion or belief or intention, in which case there would obviously be an untrue statement of fact (q).

Mere ambiguous statements may, it would seem, be sufficient to found such an action (r), but omissions will not be enough unless they are omissions of things which, if stated, would qualify or alter the statements actually made (s).

Moreover, a statement true at the time when made, but subsequently and before allotment becoming untrue, will be sufficient ground for rescission (t), even when the letter of allotment is accompanied by a statement of the altered circumstances, if such statement does not refer to the original statement and does not inform the allottee of his right to be freed from his bargain (u). In this class of action, where rescission is sought, it is unnecessary to show that the company or its directors knew of the untruth of the statements made, or that they made them recklessly, not caring whether they were true or false. This is the most vital distinction between this sort of action and an action founded on fraud (x).

(p) Lord SELBORNE in Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank (1880), 5 A. C. 317, seems to have said that damages could not be obtained against the company; the principle enunciated by WILLES, J., in Barwick v. Joint Stock Bank (1867), L. R. 2 Ex. 259, would seem contrary to this. This principle has been approved in many cases, notably in Swire v. Francis (1878), 3 A. C. 106; Mackay v. Commercial Bank of New Brunswick (1874), L. R. 5 P. C. 394; and Houldsworth v. City of Glasgow Bank (1880), 5 A. C., at p. 326.

Nor even in the absence of fraud is it essential to show that the misstatement was so material as to go to the whole root of the contract, in other words, to make such a case as was necessary to obtain this form of relief in a court of law before the Judicature Acts (y); it is enough to show that there was a material misstatement which, taken as true, would have added substantially to the value of the shares acquired (z).

(2) There are several cases where the company will be held to be responsible for misrepresentations, or will not be allowed to take the benefit of a contract induced by them.

These cases were divided by Romer, J. (a), into four classes. His lordship says: "Speaking generally, to make a company liable "for misrepresentations inducing a contract to take shares from it, "the shareholder must bring his case within one or other of the "following heads:—

"(1) Where the misrepresentations are made by the directors "or other the general agents of the company entitled to act and "acting on its behalf, as, for example, by a prospectus issued by the "authority or sanction of the directors of a company inviting "subscriptions for shares.

"(2) Where the misrepresentations are made by a special agent "of the company acting within the scope of his authority, as, for "example, by an agent specially authorized to obtain on behalf of "the company subscriptions for shares. This head, of course, in- "cludes the case of a person constituted agent by the subsequent "adoption of his acts."

In cases coming under these heads it would appear that a company will be liable even where they did not make the statements with the view of inducing persons to take shares, but any statement complained of must have been made by the company to the person aggrieved, or to all persons of the class to which he belongs, as, for instance, to all intending shareholders (b). Thus a statement made by a company to its own shareholders only will not be sufficient to entitle a person to bring an action where he was not a shareholder at the date of the statement, even if the statement has been shown to him by one of the company's directors without the sanction of the other directors (c). It will be otherwise where the company or its directors have allowed the statement to get into circulation (d).

On this ground it would appear that a person who has taken shares on the statements contained in a statement in lieu of a prospectus or in any other document which the directors of a company are required to file will be entitled to rescission. Of course, transferees of shares are in quite a different position (e); except possibly in the case where the original shareholder has been misled, and they have stepped into his shoes, it would appear that they can never have any relief against the company (f). The third head mentioned by the learned Judge in Lynde v. Anglo-Italian, etc., Hemp Co. (g) is, " Where the company can be held affected before the " contract is complete with the knowledge that it is induced by " misrepresentations, as, for example, when the directors on allotting " shares know, in fact, that the application for them has been induced " by misrepresentations, even though made without any authority."

The fourth head is, " Where the contract is made on the basis " of certain representations, whether the particulars of those repre- " sentations were known to the company or not, and it turns out " that some of those representations were material and untrue, as, " for example, if the directors of a company know, when allotting, " that an application for shares is based on the statements contained " in a prospectus, even though that prospectus was issued without " authority or even before the company was formed, and even if " the contents are not known to the directors."

Under this fourth head would appear to come cases where the directors did not, when allotting, know that the application was made on the basis of any prospectus or any representations at all, for Karberg's Case (h) is put under this head, and in that case the Judge in the Court of first instance found, and the Court of Appeal apparently did not differ from him on this point, that there was no evidence that the directors knew that the application was based on the prospectus containing the statements complained of; and Tamplin's Case (i) was treated as being governed by Karberg's Case (k), and there again there was the same finding in the Court of first instance (l). In cases under this head, it would appear, however, that there must be some formal written or printed statement purporting to be made in the name of the company, a more irresponsible verbal statement by a promoter or other person would not be enough; otherwise, it seems impossible to reconcile Karberg's Case (k) with other cases (m).

(3) The third requisite in an action for rescission is that the applicant should show that he was induced by the misrepresentation or omission complained of to take his shares. This would appear in all cases to be a question of fact, and where there is a jury a question for the jury (n). It is not necessary, though usually desirable, for the applicant for relief to go into the box and state that but for the statement or the prospectus complained of he would not or might not have taken his shares, but he must either by such statement or in some other way, as, e.g., by showing the materiality of such statement or omission, convince the jury, or, where the Judge has to find the facts, the Judge, that such is the case (o). Where the statement complained of is ambiguous, he must show the sense in which he understood it (p). No relief will be given to a person who was a party to the fraud complained of (q).

The question remains whether rescission can be obtained where the prospectus has not complied with the statutory requirements. It was decided (r) under section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, that rescission could not be given for non-compliance with that section; but this decision does not necessarily apply to the present statutory requirements, because section 38, unlike the latter enactments, makes non-compliance with its terms a fraud on the part of certain named persons of whom the company is not one.

If some of the requirements of the statute are not complied with, an applicant might well be led by such omission to believe that the thing required to be divulged did not exist in the case of the company issuing the prospectus (s). This would appear to be the case, for example, if a company which has founders' shares does not refer to founders' shares at all; in such case it might reasonably be assumed that it had no founders' shares, and again, if there is no reference to an underwriting commission payable in respect of debentures (t), it would not be unreasonable to assume that it was paying no such commission. These remarks do not apply to all the statutory requirements, but it is submitted that the Court might well have taken the view that in all cases where a person could satisfy a jury or a Judge who was trying questions of fact that he would or might not have taken shares or debentures (u) had he known of certain facts which the statute required to be divulged, but which were in fact not divulged, he would be entitled to relief by way of rescission (x). This view has, however, not prevailed (y).

It may, however, be added that the difficulty in ascertaining whether a person would or would not have taken shares if he had known of certain facts, which he did not know of, has not been found insuperable in cases (z) under section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, and it is difficult to see why the company should be allowed to benefit by a failure to comply with its statutory duty.

Generally speaking, where there is a voidable contract, the person entitled to avoid it may do so at any time, until he has done some action which is only consistent with the intention to stand by his contract, and such act must be done with full knowledge of the right to avoid the contract (a).

(s) See the analogy of the cases, where it has been held that if a promoter, who owes a duty to the company to divulge any profit he is making does not state that he is making any profit, he in effect says that he is making no profit: Bentinck v. Fenn (1887), 12 A. C. 652, 671; Leeds and Hanley Theatres of Varieties, [1902] 2 Ch. 809.

(t) The company cannot pay underwriting commissions in respect of shares unless it divulges the fact in its prospectus, where there is a prospectus: see s. 89 of the Act, and see also as to minimum subscription, s. 85.

(u) See Shepheard v. Bray, [1906] 2 Ch. 235, but see the remarks on this decision when it came before the Court of Appeal, [1907] 2 Ch. 571.

(x) It is thought that the company does not come within the protection given to "directors or other persons" given by s. 81, sub-s. 6 of the Act, where they do not know of facts, or make honest mistakes of fact.

This rule applies in the case of a shareholder whose shares have been forfeited, and he may in an action for calls made before forfeiture repudiate any liability to the company unless he has previously taken up a position which is not consistent with this attitude (b).

But the rule does not apply to a shareholder whose name is on the company's register. Before taking proceedings such a person may, where the case requires investigation, take a proper time so as to enable him to look into the matters in question (c), but subject to this a person who knows of his right to repudiate his shares must act at once (d). It will not be enough for the shareholder to write repudiating his shares (e), nor may he, in the absence of a definite agreement with the company to that effect (f), wait and see what is the result of other proceedings founded on the same misrepresentations as he complains of (g). Thus delays of a month and a half (h), of a month (i), and of twelve days (k) have in the special circumstances been held to be fatal. Any act which amounts to an election, with full knowledge, to keep the shares will also be fatal (l); but it would seem that after a person has testified his election to repudiate his shares by issuing his writ he may with impunity do acts which would otherwise amount to an election to keep the shares (m). In the cases where the right to repudiate a voidable contract arises out of a divergence between the prospectus and the memorandum or articles of association, a shareholder is bound not only to take steps immediately on ascertaining his right so to do, but also to take immediate steps to make himself acquainted with the company's memorandum and articles of association. In these cases, therefore, steps to repudiate will have to be taken almost immediately after allotment (n).

After a winding-up no relief can, in the case of a voidable contract to take shares, be given to a person on the register against the company, unless proceedings have been commenced before the winding-up (nn). In such case there cannot be a restitutio in integrum (o). This rule applies in a compulsory winding-up (p), when the winding up will be taken to commence on the date of the presentation of the successful petition (q) and in a voluntary winding-up (r), and it applies even when all the creditors have been paid (s). It has been extended so as to preclude rescission, and consequently an action for damages against the company also (t), where there is no winding-up, but the company has, before proceedings were commenced, stopped business (u). The fact that the company is insolvent at the time proceedings are started will not, if it has not then ceased to carry on its business, preclude rescission (x).

A winding-up will not, however, preclude the right to rescission where a writ has been issued before the winding-up (y), or where in answer to an application for calls under Order 14, R. S. C., an affidavit has been filed before winding up stating the deponent's intention to counterclaim for rescission (z). In these cases, notwithstanding the winding-up, the Court has power to order rectification of the register (a). It has been held that where, before winding-up, a shareholder successfully defends an action for calls on the ground of fraud he cannot, after winding-up, repudiate his shares (b); but this case was doubted by the Court of Appeal (z).

Winding-up will not preclude relief where before it commenced there was a definite agreement between the applicant for relief and the company providing that the applicant should stay his hand until the termination of proceedings then pending between the company and another applicant for relief, whose cause of action arose out of the same misrepresentations (c). A mere unenforceable understanding will, however, not be enough to avail the applicant (d), or an agreement between the company and other persons coupled with repudiation by the applicant (e) unless possibly where the directors have given notice that they do not intend to proceed with actions for calls while the proceedings for rescission are pending (f).

In one case (g) rectification was granted after winding-up, where the shareholder had repudiated and the secretary of the company had returned his deposit moneys, but had, without his knowledge, left his name on the register.

As directors of a company have, where there is a clear case for rescission, power to rectify the register without an order (h) directing them so to do, this case may possibly be supported on the ground that the company was estopped from saying the repudiating shareholder was a shareholder; but considerable doubt was thrown on the case in the Scottish Petroleum Co. (i). Where shares have been allotted owing to a mutual mistake, the position seems to be the same as in misrepresentation cases (k).

Where shares have been allotted to an infant, the allotment would seem to be voidable, and not void (l), and if the infant repudiates in time and has taken no benefit, he can recover the moneys paid (m).

for those statements, on the principle that all persons directly concerned in telling untruths must be treated as principals (n).

The only action which, apart from statute, lay against such persons was the common law action of deceit (o).

This action lay where a person made a false statement knowing it to be false or recklessly, not caring whether it was false or true, and meaning that another person should act on it, and such other person did act on it, believing it to be true and was damaged by so acting (p). To consider these points somewhat more minutely :—

It will be necessary in an action of this sort to show that the person sought to be made liable actually made the statement complained of, either personally or by means of some agent whom he instructed to make it. For instance, a director will not in an action of this nature be responsible for the false statements of his co-directors (q), or for false statements made by sub-agents of the company (r), unless it can be shown that he has concurred in such statements or failed in doing some act he ought to have done. It will be difficult for a director to escape on this ground, now that a signed prospectus must be filed. It will further be necessary to show that there was a false statement of an existing fact, or that a false impression as to an existing fact has been conveyed (s).

A mere omission will not be enough, unless the effect of such omission be to make what is stated false (t).

If the statement was true when made, and subsequently but before a contract to take shares made on the strength of it is completed becomes untrue, it will not be sufficient in an action of deceit (u).

But a person cannot save himself in an action of this nature by showing that the document containing the false statement referred to other documents, which if they had been inspected would have shown the falsity of the statement complained of (x).

The third thing which must be shown in an action of this nature is that the person who made the false statement, or, if he was a mere agent, and his principal is sought to be made liable, his principal made such statement either knowing it to be false or what comes to the same thing recklessly not caring whether it was true or false. The mere fact that the statement was made without reasonable grounds for believing it to be true will not be enough (y).

In the case of an ambiguous statement it will be necessary to show that either the defendant meant it in the sense which is untrue(z), or presumably that he made it trickily meaning it to be understood in such a way as to convey an untruth.

The fourth point that must be shown is that the statement was either made to the person injured or to some other with the intent that the person injured should act on it (a).

Thus it would appear that a statement made in a prospectus not issued for the benefit of persons buying on the market will give no right of action to such persons (b). A report made to shareholders will not give a right of action to non-shareholders or even to shareholders unless the intention was that such report should get into the hands of existing shareholders (c). An untruth told to the Stock Exchange authorities, with a view of obtaining an official quotation, will not give a cause of action to a person buying on the strength of such quotation, even though he knows all the requirements of the committee before granting an official quotation and buys because he assumes they have been complied with (d).

In one case, however, a person who had been the recipient of a prospectus, subsequently, after reading a puff of the company in a newspaper at a time when no shares were being issued, bought shares on the market, and it was held that the prospectus was intended to influence persons buying on the market, and consequently that the purchaser was entitled to succeed in an action of deceit (e). This fourth requirement is in effect "the malice," i.e. the intention to injure, which in such cases will usually be implied, and which is required in most actions of tort; it has been described as the nexus which connects the plaintiff and the defendant (f).

Probably in the case of fraudulent statements in a statement in lieu of a prospectus (g), an action of deceit will lie against directors, at all events where the plaintiff has bought his shares from the company on the strength of such statement. It is, however, doubtful whether such a statement, though filed and therefore open to the public, will be held to be made with the intention of purchasers on the market acting on it, except in exceptional cases.

Lastly, the plaintiff in an action of deceit must show that he has been damaged by the deceit complained of (h). This is not, as was stated by Sir George Jessel in one case (i), an inference of law; it is in each case a question of fact which must be decided by the jury or other tribunal trying the facts (k). It is not, however, necessary to call the plaintiff to say that he was misled; in fact, as has been pointed out, when these actions were originally instituted the plaintiff could not give evidence in his own behalf (l); but the jury must be able to infer from the materiality of the misstatements or otherwise that the plaintiff would not, or at all events might not, have taken his shares if the misstatement had never been made (m). These inferences may be rebutted, as, for instance, where the tribunal trying the question is satisfied that the plaintiff bought his shares solely on the strength of a particular statement which was true (n), or that he made his own independent investigations and relied on them only (o).

Where the plaintiff relies on an ambiguous statement, it is for him to show the sense in which he understood it (p).

(g) Persons wilfully making in a statement in lieu of a prospectus a statement false in any material particular knowing it to be false are guilty of a misdemeanour and will be liable on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four months, with or without hard labour, and in either case in lieu of or in addition to imprisonment to a fine; such fine in case of summary conviction not to exceed £100. These actions do not survive against the executors of a deceased person (q); they will not be barred by laches or because the company, whose shares were taken, is in winding-up, but only by the lapse of the statutory period of six years from the discovery of the fraud (r).

The decision in Derry v. Peek (s) that it was necessary to make a case of fraud against persons responsible for misrepresentations in a prospectus was thought to unduly favour such persons, and consequently the Directors' Liability Act, 1890, was passed. This Act is incorporated with slight modifications in the present Act (t).

Now, where a prospectus (u) invites persons to subscribe for shares in or debentures or debenture stock of a company (1) every person who is a director of the company at the time of the issue of the prospectus, and (2) every person who has authorised the naming of him and is named in the prospectus as having agreed to become a director either immediately or after an interval of time, and (3) every promoter (x) of the company, and (4) every person who has authorized the issue of the prospectus will be liable to pay compensation to all persons who subscribe for any shares or debentures or debenture stock on the faith of such prospectus for the loss or damage they may have sustained by reason of any untrue statement therein or in any report or memorandum appearing on the face thereof or by reference incorporated therein or issued therewith unless it is proved—

1. With respect to every untrue statement not purporting to be made on the authority of an expert (y), or of a public official document or statement that he had reasonable ground (z) to believe and did up to the time of the allotment of the shares or debentures, as the case may be, believe that the statement was true; and

2. With respect to every untrue statement purporting to be a statement by or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract

(u) For definition of prospectus, see ibid., s. 285, supra, p. 214, note (s).

(x) "Promoter" for the purposes of this section means a promoter who was a party to the preparation of the prospectus or notice or of the portion thereof containing the untrue statement but does not include any person by reason of his acting in a professional capacity for persons engaged in procuring the formation of the company: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 84 (5).

(y) The expression "expert" in this section includes engineer, valuer, accountant and any other person whose profession gives authority to a statement made by him: ibid. It will be noticed that this definition does not purport to be exhaustive.

(z) A person to whom this Act applies may rely on the statements of others whose duty it is to keep him informed: Stevens v. Hoare (1904), 20 T. L. R. 407; but it is no ground of defence to say he believed a statement to be true if he knew all the facts but took an erroneous view of the law; Sheppheard v. Bray, [1904] A. C. 342.

from a report or valuation of an expert that it fairly represented the statement, or was a correct and fair copy of or extract from the report or valuation; but the director, person named as director, promoter, or person who authorised the issue of the prospectus will be liable to pay the compensation above mentioned if it is proved that he had no reasonable ground to believe that the person making the statement, report, or valuation was competent to make it; and

3. With respect to every untrue statement purporting to be a statement made by an official person or contained in what purports to be a copy of or extract from a public official document that it was a correct and fair representation of the statement or copy of or extract from the document.

Further, a person may protect himself in an action under the section by showing that though he had consented to become a director he withdrew such consent before the issue of the prospectus, and that it was issued without his authority or consent; and any person rendered liable under the section may defend himself by showing (1) That the prospectus was issued without his knowledge or consent, and that on becoming aware of its issue he forthwith gave reasonable public notice (a) that it was issued without his knowledge or consent; or by showing (2) that after the issue of the prospectus and before allotment thereunder he, on becoming aware of any untrue statement therein, withdrew his consent thereto, and gave reasonable public notice of the withdrawal and of the reason therefor.

Where a company existing on the eighteenth day of August, one thousand eight hundred and ninety, has issued shares, debentures, or debenture stock and for the purpose of obtaining further capital by subscriptions for shares, debentures, or debenture stock issues a prospectus, a director will not be liable in respect of any statement therein, unless he has authorised the issue of the prospectus or has adopted or ratified it.

Where the prospectus contains the name of a person as a director of the company, or as having agreed to become a director thereof, and he has not consented to become a director (b), or has withdrawn his consent before the issue of the prospectus, and has not authorised or consented to the issue thereof, the directors of the company, except any without whose knowledge or consent the prospectus was issued, and any other person who authorised the issue thereof, will be liable to indemnify the person named as aforesaid against all damages, costs, and expenses to which he may be made liable by reason of his name having been inserted in the prospectus, or in defending himself against any action or legal proceedings brought against him in respect thereof.

(a) A statement in his defence to an action on the prospectus will not be sufficient: Drincqbier v. Wood, [1899] 1 Ch. 393.

(b) Even apart from this section a person can restrain the use of his name where he has not consented to act as director; Routh v. Webster (1847), 10 Beav. 562; Walter v. Ashton, [1900] 2 Ch. 282.

Every person who by reason of his being a director, or named as a director or as having agreed to become a director, or of his having authorised the issue of the prospectus, becomes liable to make any payment under this section may recover contribution, as in cases of contract, from any other person who, if sued separately, would have been liable to make the same payment, unless the person who has become so liable was, and that other person was not, guilty of fraudulent misrepresentation. These last words seem to do away to some extent with the decision in Gerson v. Simpson (c), which established that the Directors' Liability Act had, even in cases of fraud, done away with the old rule, that there could be no contribution between joint tortfeasors (d) in prospectus cases. In these cases the third party procedure provided by O. 16, R.S.C., can be utilized.

Claims against a company and its directors may be joined in one action (e), and several persons who have been deceived by the same prospectus may be co-plaintiffs (f).

Warrington, J. (g), has held that an action for contribution under the section would lie against the executors of a deceased director, and sums paid to the plaintiff in the action on the prospectus for costs would be included in such contribution, but not any costs of an appeal, or any costs incurred by the person claiming contribution in the previous action. The effect of the section in the case of directors, promoters, and persons who are with their authority named as directors in a prospectus, would seem to be to render such persons absolutely liable for every statement in a prospectus unless there is something in the section to relieve them of such liability (ff).

Actions under the section will probably be statute barred at the end of six years from the time when the cause of action arose—but they are not actions for penalties within the meaning of the Civil Procedure Act, 1833—and so will not be barred at the end of two years from that time (h).

If the requirements of section 81 of the Act as to the contents of a prospectus are not complied with, a director or other person responsible for the prospectus will not incur any liability by reason of the non-compliance if he proves, (a) as regards any matter not disclosed, he was not cognisant thereof, or (b) the non-compliance arose from an honest mistake of fact on his part.

particulars which it may be considered advisable to set out, e.g. the working prospects, the profits made, or the dividends paid in past years, and any copies of or extracts from public official documents, reports of valuers, or accountants or other experts (l) as to the value of the company's property and/or any property the company is to acquire or on any other matter, e.g. the person if any who is to be managing director or manager and the terms of his employment]. The preference shares of the company confer a right to a 6 per cent. cumulative preferential dividend, and to priority on a return of capital in a winding-up.

The debentures are secured by a trust deed dated 19 , and made between the company of the one part and A.B. and C.D. of the other part, creating a first specific charge on the freehold and leasehold property of the company and a floating charge on the undertaking and remaining assets of the company including its uncalled capital for the time being and the company has not power to create any mortgage or charge ranking pari passu with or having priority to the debentures.

The company may redeem any of the debentures at any time after the day of 19 , by giving six months' notice of its intention so to do to the registered holders of such debentures—and the principal moneys and interest secured by the debentures will be immediately payable in the events specified in such debentures. Interest on the debentures will be paid by equal half-yearly payments on the day of and the day of in each year. The first of such payments to be made on the day of next. Each debenture may at the option of the holder be paid up in full at any time before the day of next, and all interest will be calculated from the date or dates when payment was made.

As soon as payment in full has been made in respect of any debenture, the allotment letter and provisional receipts may be exchanged for such debenture. Certificates for the preference shares will be issued as soon as possible and on such issue every person entitled to a certificate will be notified of the fact and will receive his certificate in exchange for his allotment letter and the provisional receipts for the moneys payable on application and allotment in respect of the shares mentioned in such certificate.

The minimum subscription on which the directors may proceed to allotment is 50,000 shares of £1 each. During the past two years, two offers of shares have been made. The amounts offered on such occasions (respectively) were 20,000 ordinary shares of £1 each and 500 ordinary shares of £1 each. All the shares so offered were actually allotted and are now fully paid up (or as may be).

Of the preference shares now offered for subscription, 20,000 have been underwritten at a commission at the rate of 5 per cent. on the nominal value of the shares and two-thirds of the debentures (m) now issued have been

(l) See s. 84 of the Act, pp. 238 et seq., ante, as to these.

(m) It is a condition precedent to an application for an official quotation on the Stock Exchange that two-thirds of the amount proposed to be issued of any class of shares or securities whether such issue be the whole or a part of the authorized amount shall have been applied for by and unconditionally allotted to the public, shares or underwritten at a commission at the rate of 5 per cent. on the nominal value of such debentures.

The number of shares fixed by the articles of association of the company as the qualification of a director is [here set out the substance of the article if any, dealing with this matter] and the following provisions are made in such articles of association for the remuneration of the directors of the company are [here set out any articles which deal with the remuneration of directors or managing directors, or the payment of their travelling expenses, or give power to pay such remuneration under given circumstances and other like articles].

The following contracts have been entered into :—

(1) A contract dated the day of 19 , between A.B. of and C.D. of whereby the said A.B. agreed to sell the business of a heretofore carried on by him at for £ payable as to £ in cash as to £ in fully paid ordinary shares of £ each and as to £ in debentures £ of such consideration is payable for goodwill.

(2) A contract dated the day of 19 between the said C.D. and the Company whereby the said C.D. agreed to sell the property comprised in the said last mentioned agreement for £ payable as to £ in cash as to £ in fully paid ordinary shares of £ each and as to £ in debentures of which £ was payable for goodwill.

(3) A contract dated and made between E.F. of the one part and the company of the other part. Whereby the said E.F. agreed to serve the company as manager for a period of years at a salary of £ per annum.

Copies of the above contracts and of the memorandum and articles of association and of the trust deed and of one of the debentures can be inspected at during business hours any day before the closing of the subscription list.

Except as above mentioned the company has not issued any shares or debentures for a consideration other than cash.

C.D. is the promoter of the company and he is to receive £ in consideration of his paying the preliminary expenses of the company which include duties on registration law costs printing advertising stamps commission for underwriting payable as above a brokerage of on each debenture and of on each share allotted in respect of applications on brokers stamped application forms [and not being applications by underwriters or in direct relief of underwriting] etc. and are estimated at £ .

The following directors are interested in the promotion of the company namely—the said A.B. as the former owner and vendor of the property comprised in the above mentioned contract of 19 to the extent of £ cash and £ debentures, X.Y. as an underwriter of shares at the commission above mentioned.

Every ordinary share confers one vote at every meeting of the company securities granted in lieu of money payments not being considered to form a part of such public allotment, but such shares and securities are taken into account in ascertaining the amount proposed to be issued.

and every preference share one vote at every meeting of the company where a special or an extraordinary resolution is to be passed or confirmed.

A copy of the Memorandum of Association of the Company will be found printed in the fold of this prospectus.

There are no founders management or deferred shares.

Applications for allotment should be made on the accompanying form and should together with a cheque for the application moneys be forwarded to the Bankers of the Company.

Should no allotment be made all moneys paid on application will be returned in full and where the number of shares or debentures allotted is less than the number applied for the surplus of such moneys will be applied towards payment of the moneys payable on allotment on the shares and debentures allotted and the balance if any will be returned.

Failure to pay at the due date any instalment on shares or debentures allotted will render the allotment liable to cancellation and all previous payments liable to forfeiture—or the company may at its option charge interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum from the date when the instalment became payable until the actual date of payment.

Application will be made in due course to the committee of the Stock Exchange for a special settlement and an official quotation for the shares and debentures of this issue.

Copies of this prospectus can be had from the Brokers Bankers and Solicitors of the Company.

ORDER UNDER SECTION 38 [NOW REPEALED] OF THE COMPANIES ACT, 1867, AND THE DIRECTORS' LIABILITY ACT, 1890 [NOW REPEALED AND RE-ENACTED BY SECTION 84 OF THE COMPANIES (CONSOLIDATION) ACT, 1908] (r).

(Title and Formal Parts.)

This Court doth declare that the prospectus of the L. & N.B. Ltd. in the Statement of Claim referred to must be deemed fraudulent as regards the plaintiff within the meaning of section 38 of the Companies Act 1867 on the part of the defendants all of whom knowingly issued the same by reason of it not having specified the dates of and the names of the parties to the contracts referred to in paragraphs 5, 6, and 7 of the Statement of Claim and that the plaintiff is entitled to damages for the said fraud under the said section and that as against all the defendants the plaintiff is entitled under the Directors' Liability Act 1890 to compensation by reason of the untrue statements made by the said defendants in the said prospectus and referred to in paragraph 9 of the Statement of Claim and it is ordered that an inquiry be made what sum by way of compensation ought to be awarded to the Plaintiff on the footing of the said declarations for the loss or damage sustained by him by reason of his having taken 400 shares of £10 each in the said Company on the faith of such prospectus having regard to the price paid by him for the said 400 shares and the real value of such shares at the time of allotment and it is ordered that the defendants do pay to the plaintiff his costs of this action including therein the costs of the plaintiff's examination de bene esse such costs to be taxed by the Taxing Master and the parties are to be at liberty to apply as there may be occasion. Separate duties are chargeable in respect of letters of allotment and renunciation, though contained in the same document an adhesive stamp may be used, it must be cancelled by the person executing the letter: Stamp Act, 1891, as amended by Finance Act, 1899, s. 9, and Revenue Act, 1909, s. 9.

(r) It is believed that there has as yet been no successful action for damages by reason of the prospectus omitting matters required by s. 81 of the existing Act (or the sections replaced by it). An order in such an action would presumably contain a declaration that the prospectus "did not comply with the requirements of s. 81 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, by reason of it not having specified the dates of and the parties to the following contracts, all of which are material, namely, the contracts referred to in paragraph of the statement of claim" or as may be, "and that the plaintiff is as against all the defendants entitled under the said section to damages for the said non-compliance." There will also be an inquiry as to damages as in the above form.

Statement of Claim mentioned respectively to the payments made by them respectively in respect of the following matters namely First Compensation to persons who subscribed for shares on the faith of a prospectus mentioned in the first paragraph of the Statement of Claim the amount of such compensation not to exceed 15*s.* per share but this is not to extend to any moneys paid into Court in actions which are still pending Secondly The costs of the plaintiffs in the action of Broome v. Speak in the pleadings mentioned up to and including judgment as well as his costs of the inquiry directed by such judgment and the reference to Mr. C.E.C.H. and E.G. Thirdly Costs paid to other persons who applied for shares as aforesaid whether under judgments in actions brought by them respectively or by agreement together with interest on the amounts that such estates respectively are liable to contribute as aforesaid at the rate of 4 p.c. p. a. as from the dates when the payments in respect of which such estates are so liable to make contribution were made by the plaintiffs respectively And it is ordered that the following accounts and inquiries be taken and made (1) An inquiry what sums have been paid by the plaintiffs respectively in respect of the several matters aforesaid (2) An inquiry how much is due from the estates of the said B. and of the said G. respectively to each of the plaintiffs for principal and interest having regard to the number of other persons liable to make the said payments and to the insolvency of the estate of the said W.M.O. and of the estate of the defendant W.D.C. since deceased and all sums received from such last mentioned estates or either of them or from the defendants R.M. H.M. and W.D.G. or any of them And it is ordered that what on making the said inquiries shall appear to be due from the estates of the said G.B. and T.G. be answered by the defendants their respective executors out of their assets in due course of administration And it is ordered that in case the defendants the executors of the said G.B. do not admit assets for that purpose or for the purpose of paying the costs hereinafter directed to be paid by them as such executors an account be taken of the personal estate of the said G.B. come to the hands of the defendants J.W.C. T.G. A.B. or any of them or of any other person or persons by the order or to the use of the said defendants or any of them [here follow similar directions with regard to the estate of T.G.] And it is ordered that the defendants J.W.C. T.G. and A.B. as executors of the G.B. and the defendants E.O.S. G.B. and J.W.C. as executors of T.G. and the defendant Y.E.W. as executrix of the said W.M.O. pay to the plaintiffs their costs of this action up to and including judgment but not including the costs of the motion to vary the minutes such costs to be taxed by the Taxing Master and this Court doth reserve all costs subsequent to this judgment and the parties are to be at liberty to apply as there may be occasion. [Shepheard v. Bray, 1904, S. 2354. WARRINGTON, J., July 17th, 1906, reported [1906] 2 Ch. 235 (s).] (s) Doubt was thrown on this decision on appeal, where it was compromised. See [1907] 2 Ch. 571. The Law Journal report, 76 L. J. (CH.) 692, indicates that this doubt arose owing to the difficulty the Court felt in holding that s. 84 (4) applied to executors of deceased directors. It is thought, however, that the order may be useful as a precedent.

CHAPTER V.

SHARES.

ANNUAL LIST OF MEMBERS AND SUMMARY.

EVERY company having a share capital must once at least in every year make a list of all persons who, on the fourteenth day after the first or only ordinary general meeting in the year, are members of the company, and of all persons who have ceased to be members since the date of the last return or (in the case of the first return) the incorporation of the company.

The list must state the names, addresses, and occupations of all the past and present members therein mentioned, and the number of shares held by each of the existing members at the date of the return, specifying shares transferred since the date of the last return or (in the case of the first return) of the incorporation of the company by persons who are still members and have ceased to be members respectively and the dates of registration of the transfers, and must contain a summary distinguishing between shares issued for cash and shares issued as fully or partly paid up otherwise than in cash, and specifying the following particulars:—

(a) The amount of the share capital of the company, and the number and amount of the shares into which it is divided;

(b) The number of shares taken from the commencement of the company up to the date of the return;

(c) The amount called up on each share;

(d) The total amount of calls received;

(e) The total amount of calls unpaid;

(f) The total amount of the sums (if any) paid by way of commission in respect of any shares or debentures (a), or allowed by way of discount in respect of any debentures since the date of the last return;

(g) The total number of shares forfeited;

(h) The total amount of shares or stock for which share warrants are outstanding at the date of the return;

(i) The total amount of share warrants issued and surrendered respectively since the date of the last return;

(a) The expression "debentures" includes debenture stock: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 285.

(k) The number of shares or amount of stock comprised in each share warrant;

(l) The names and addresses of the persons who at the date of the return are the directors of the company, or occupy the position of directors, by whatever name called;

(m) The total amount of debt due from the company in respect of all mortgages and charges which are required (or in the case of a company registered in Scotland, which if the company had been registered in England would be required) to be registered with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies under the Act or which would have been required to be so registered if created after the 1st day of July, 1908.

The summary must also include a statement made up to such date as may be specified in the statement, in the form of a balance sheet, audited by the company's auditors and containing a summary of its share capital, its liabilities, and its assets, giving such particulars as will disclose the general nature of such liabilities and assets, and how the values of the fixed assets have been arrived at, but the balance sheet need not include a statement of profit and loss (b).

Probably it is not necessary for each item of the fixed assets to be separately valued, but separate figures should be given where different considerations apply to different classes of assets, and goodwill should not be included in one item with the other assets, if its value has been arrived at in a different way (bb).

The list and summary must be contained in a separate part of its register of members and must be completed within seven days after the fourteenth day after the first or only ordinary general meeting of the company in the year and the company must forthwith forward a copy to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (c).

(b) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 26 (1), (2), and (3). The last provision does not apply to private companies; see s. 7 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, post, pp. 417 and 418, for the exception in favour of companies under that Act, which have deposited accounts and a balance sheet as required by that section, and have sent a copy of them to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.

(c) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 26; for form of summary see Form E. in the third schedule to the Act being the next form. A company which makes default under the section is liable to a fine of £5 for every day during which the default continues, the offence being a continuing one, and six years being the limit for recovering penalties: Reg. v. Catholic Life Institution (1883), 48 L. T. 675. Every director and manager of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default is liable to a like penalty: ibid., sub-s. 5. The fact that directors have committed an offence by not summoning a meeting—so that they cannot make a list of the members so as to comply with the section—will be no answer, and they can be convicted for both offences: Park v. Lawton, [1911] 1 K. B. 588. An offence under this section is a criminal offence: Reg. v. Tyler, [1891] 2 Q. B. 588. On a summons under the section a magistrate may go behind the register though it is not his business to deal with complicated questions of title: Briton Medical and General Life Association (1888), 39 C. D. 61; Grosvenor Bank and Discount v. Boaler (1885),

Every limited banking company and every insurance company and deposit, provident, or benefit society under the Act must, before it commences business, and also on the first Monday in February and the first Tuesday in August in every year during which it carries on business, make a statement in the form marked C. in the First Schedule to this Act, or as near thereto as circumstances will admit.

A copy of the statement must be put up in a conspicuous place in the registered office of the company, and in every branch office or place where the business of the company is carried on.

Every member and every creditor of the company will be entitled to a copy of the statement, on payment of a sum not exceeding sixpence.

If default is made in compliance with this section, the company will be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds for every day during which the default continues; and every director and manager of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorises or permits the default will be liable to the like penalty.

For the purposes of the Act a company that carries on the business of insurance in common with any other business or businesses will be deemed to be an insurance company.

These provisions do not apply to any life or other assurance company to which the provisions of the Life Assurance Companies Acts, 1870 to 1872 (now the Assurance Companies Act, 1909), as to the annual statements to be made by such a company, apply with or without modifications, if the company complies with those provisions (d).

RIGHTS AND LIABILITIES OF SHAREHOLDERS.

There remains to consider the rights and liabilities which spring from a contract to take shares.

To take the liabilities first, there is the liability already indicated to pay to the company or to contribute to its assets in a winding-up the full nominal value of the shares.

In properly drawn articles shares are also subject to a lien for moneys due to the company, or at all events for calls, and also to forfeiture for non-payment of calls.

The rights usually conferred on shareholders are the right to a certificate, the right to transfer and generally to deal with the shares, the right to dividends and to participate in the assets of the company on a winding-up, and the right to vote, and the right to convert their shares into share warrants or stock, and the right sometimes given to have new shares allotted to them on an increase of capital.

It is proposed to deal with all these matters in this chapter except the right to participate in the assets of a company on a winding-up, which it is thought can be more conveniently dealt with in the part of this work which deals with winding-up (k).

PAYMENT FOR SHARES.

A company cannot, by its memorandum or articles, provide for relieving any of its shareholders from their liability to pay an amount equal to the full nominal value of their shares (l). Payment must either be made to the company while it is a going concern, or must be contributed to its assets in a winding-up, and the rule holds good even when the creditors of the company have been satisfied without such contribution and the only persons interested are the other shareholders (m). An arrangement by which debentures which have been issued at a discount can be exchanged at any time for shares equal in nominal value to the par value of the debentures is bad as offending against this rule (n), and debentures charged on and payable only out of profits cannot be exchanged for fully paid shares where no profits have been earned (o).

Forfeited shares cannot be issued as fully paid if their full nominal value has been called, but not paid, up; but they may be issued as paid up to the extent of the amounts actually paid up on them (p). Although a company cannot issue shares at a discount, yet if it issues shares with nothing paid on them or partly paid shares as fully paid up, and gives a certificate under its seal to that effect, it will be estopped from denying that such shares are fully paid up against any person who has been damaged by such misrepresentation (q). The same estoppel will apply where the company has on a transfer of shares which are not fully paid given a certificate that they are fully paid, and a person acts on the faith of such certificate and is prejudiced thereby (r), and even where the transferee is a director and has received a transfer of shares instead of having them allotted direct to him (s).

In such case it would appear that the directors responsible for the misrepresentation would be personally liable for the damage the company has suffered (t), and the company could also get indemnified by the persons at whose request the certificates were issued (u).

Although where there is a contract to issue shares at a discount the person who has agreed to take them may not be liable on his contract, if he has allowed his name to be on the register, and has done acts which are only consistent with his being a member, a fresh contract to be a member will be inferred, and with it, where there is no case of estoppel, will follow all the ordinary incidents of membership, including the liability to pay for the shares in full (v). It will, however, apparently be otherwise where bonus stock has been issued (x). To some extent the underwriting provisions of the Act form an exception to the rule as to issuing shares at a discount, but they do not apparently authorize the issue of shares at a discount (y), although it would seem that under them fully or partly paid shares may be issued in consideration of a person agreeing to take and pay for other shares in full (z).

Although shares cannot be issued at a discount, there is nothing to prevent their being issued at a premium, though even in this case it would seem that a shareholder will only be liable as a contributory for the nominal amount of his shares, the premium in effect being the price he pays for the right to purchase shares, which are considered to be worth more than their nominal value (a).

A company need not require that the full value of shares shall be paid on their allotment, and in practice it rarely does so.

There is nothing to prevent a limited company providing by its memorandum of association that part of its capital shall only be capable of being called up in the event and for the purposes of a winding-up, and such a provision would be unalterable (b).

A limited company may by special resolution determine that any portion of its capital which has not been already called up shall not be capable of being called up, except in the event and for the purposes of the company being wound up, and thereupon that portion of its capital will not be capable of being called up except in the event and for the purposes of a winding-up (c) ; and an unlimited company which has a share capital may, on registering as a limited company, make a like provision, and if, as it is empowered to do, it increases its nominal capital by increasing the nominal amount of its shares on such registration the amount by which its capital is so increased can only be called up in the event and for the purposes of a winding-up (d). Such provisions would appear to be unalterable, as they do not apparently form part of the company's articles, and consequently the provisions for altering the articles do not affect them. Reserve capital under these sections, unlike other uncalled capital, cannot be charged while the company is a going concern (e).

Once capital has been called up, it cannot be returned (f) except on a reduction of capital where the sanction of the Court will be required or under the provisions of section 40 of the Act. These provisions are as follows :—

When a company has accumulated a sum of undivided profits, which with the sanction of the shareholders may be distributed among the shareholders in the form of a dividend or bonus, it may, by special resolution, return the same, or any part thereof, to the shareholders in reduction of the paid-up capital of the company, the unpaid capital being thereby increased by a similar amount.

The resolution shall not take effect until a memorandum showing the particulars required by this Act in the case of a reduction of capital has been produced to and registered by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies (g), but the other provisions of this Act with respect to reduction of share capital shall not apply to a reduction of paid-up capital under this section.

On a reduction of paid-up capital in pursuance of this section any shareholder, or any one or more of several joint shareholders, may within one month after the passing of the resolution for the reduction, require the company to retain, and the company shall retain accordingly, the whole of the money actually paid on the shares held by him either alone or jointly with any other person, which in consequence of the reduction would otherwise be returned to him or them and thereupon those shares shall, as regards the payment of dividend, be deemed to be paid up to the same extent only as the shares on which payment has been accepted by the shareholders in reduction of paid-up capital, and the company shall invest and keep invested the money so retained in such securities authorized for investment by trustees as the company may determine, and on the money so invested, or on so much thereof as from time to time exceeds the amount of calls subsequently made on the shares in respect of which it has been retained, the company shall pay the interest received from time to time on the securities.

The amount retained and invested shall be held to represent the future calls which may be made to replace the share capital so reduced on those shares, whether the amount obtained on sale of the whole or such proportion thereof as represents the amount of any call when made produces more or less than the amount of the call.

On a reduction of paid-up share capital in pursuance of this section the powers vested in the directors of making calls on shareholders in respect of the amount unpaid on their shares shall extend to the amount of the unpaid share capital as augmented by the reduction.

After any reduction of share capital under this section the company shall specify in the annual list of members required by this Act the amounts retained at the request of any of the shareholders in pursuance of this section, and shall specify in the statements of account laid before any general meeting of the company the amount of undivided profits returned in reduction of paid-up share capital under this section (h).

The section only authorizes a special resolution for a return of capital in cases where the company has actually got accumulated profits, and so a resolution to return capital in respect of past or future years is bad (i). The return need not necessarily be made to all the shareholders; it may for instance be so made as to equalise the amounts paid on the shares, where such amounts had previously been unequal (k).

(g) There is no special form for this return. It should be substantially in the same form as the minutes in use on a reduction of capital. As to this form, see infra, p. 690, note (l): a form of resolution will also be found on that page.

The amount payable in respect of shares is payable either in cash or in kind (l).

The question of what amounted to a payment in cash was an exceedingly important question while section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, was in force, and as section 7 of the Companies Act, 1900 (now reproduced with the modifications brought about by the Act of 1907, by section 88 of the present Act), seems to keep the decisions under that section on foot (m), it will be necessary to deal with them shortly (n). Anything which is sufficient to support a plea of payment as opposed to a plea of set-off or of accord and satisfaction will amount to a payment in cash. Thus where a person has sold property to a company for cash, and the company has debited him with the amount due on the shares he holds, at the same time crediting him with a like amount out of the purchase price, this will be a payment in cash (o), and the same rule will hold good where the contract for sale provides that the money shall be so credited even where no calls have been made on the shares, and the money payable in respect of them is not presently payable, and no entry has been made in the books of the company (p). Again, where a cash compensation was payable under an agreement and calls had not actually been made (q), and where it was part of the terms of a compromise that the moneys payable thereunder should be credited to the shares of a third person, on which calls had not been made (r), there was held to be a payment in cash. And even where a person agreed to sell property for cash and his purchasers sold to a company for cash and there was ultimately an arrangement that the original vendor should take fully paid shares instead of part of the purchase-money payable to him, such shares were held to be paid for in cash (s), but it would of course have been otherwise if the original agreement had been that the sum payable as purchase-money should be paid by shares (t).

But where a person who holds shares agrees to sell property (u), or services (x) for fully paid shares, or where the company owes a debt which is not presently payable to a shareholder (y), the shares will not be paid for in cash, and a debt due under an agreement with a trustee for a company before its incorporation, will not enable the creditor if he is also a shareholder to substantiate a claim to have paid for his shares in cash (z) ; but where before winding-up an account has been stated in which calls have been treated as paid by being set off against debts due from the company, this will amount to a payment in cash (a).

An action for calls may be met by the plea of set-off only in cases where the calls have been made before the winding-up, and judgment allowing the plea of set-off has been given before winding-up (b) ; but the costs of an action for calls begun before the winding-up and discontinued by the liquidator will be allowed in proceedings taken by the liquidator in the winding-up for the same calls (c).

The company can set off a claim for calls made before winding-up against a debt existing at the date of the winding-up, even after the winding-up has commenced, but this right of set-off does not apply to calls made after the winding-up (d).

Where the amount payable on shares is payable, either wholly or partly in cash, the balance payable after payment of the moneys payable on application and allotment is payable either by instalments, i.e. the payment of fixed sums at fixed times, or, what is more usual, the balance is payable as and when called up.

In the former case the application form which accompanies the prospectus usually contains an agreement to pay the further instalments on certain fixed dates, mentioning the amounts of the instalments and the dates either in the application form itself or by reference to the prospectus. If the company goes into winding-up before all the instalments have become due, then the balance may be called up immediately, for the agreement is only operative while the company is a going concern ; and the same rule applies to calls which cannot be made immediately (e). The application form, where the amount payable is not payable by instalments, provides for the payment of the balance as and when it shall be called up. In either case the application form provides that the shares are to be allotted subject to the terms of the company's memorandum and articles of association (f).

The articles of association usually contain provisions for enabling calls to be made, and not infrequently provide that not more than a certain amount is to be called up at a time and that a specified period must elapse between two calls. An article authorizing calls to be made from time to time, but providing that no call shall exceed a specified sum, will not prevent two calls, each of which is for the sum so specified, being made at the same meeting, if the calls are payable at different dates (g). Usually the persons to make a call are the directors, though occasionally power is given to them to authorize a nominee of debenture holders to do so, and the articles also deal with the length of the notice, which is requisite for a call (h). It would seem that even where there is a defect in the appointment of the directors, they can, if the defect is not known of, make a call as validly as though there were no such defect not only where there is an article validating the acts of such directors (i), but even where there is no such article (k) ; but this will not be the case where the directors have not been appointed at all (l) and all parties are aware of the fact.

If the articles specify a minimum number of directors, then if the number of the directors has fallen below that number no call can be made (m), unless there is an article providing that continuing directors may act, and even in such case it would seem doubtful, whether it is not necessary to have a sufficient number to constitute a quorum (n). The date when a call is payable is of the essence of the call, and there will be no proper call until a resolution has been passed fixing both the amount and the date of the call (o) ; it would appear to be probable that a verbal direction to the secretary fixing the date of the call is not enough (p).

A call becomes a debt from the date when it is made although it is only payable at a future date (q), and it seems that whether there is, as is very common (r), an article providing that a call shall be deemed to have been made at the date of the resolution of the directors authorizing such call, or not, the date of such resolution will be the date when the call is made (s).

The person who is on the register when a call is made would seem to be the person liable for the call, even in cases where he has transferred his shares before the date for payment arrives (t).

The articles usually also contain provisions to make joint holders of shares jointly and severally liable for calls, and providing that interest shall run from the date when any call or instalment become payable, in case of non-payment, but they usually enable the directors to waive payment of interest (u). Joint holders would, even apart from such a clause, be jointly and severally liable (x).

A company may, if authorized by its articles, either (a) make arrangements on the issue of shares for a difference between the shareholders in the amounts and of payment of calls on their shares or (b) accept from any member who assents thereto the whole or a part of the amount remaining unpaid on any share or shares held by him, although no part of that amount has been called up (y). The articles usually do contain the authority requisite for these matters. The former power is one which is, perhaps specially, open to abuse by the directors, and they cannot use it so as to save themselves from paying calls on their own shares (z).

The articles usually also provide that the directors may make arrangements for receiving moneys paid in advance of calls, and for paying interest on the moneys so advanced until they have actually been called up (a). Such a power is perfectly valid (b); indeed, it is difficult to see how it could be otherwise, seeing that it is contained in Table A. Where such a payment has been made the relation of debtor and creditor, and not that of company and shareholder, exists qua such payment between the company and the member making the payment (c), but the member making the payment cannot compel the company to repay it (d) although it is thought that the company can, with the consent of the member, do so (e), and he will rank after other creditors in a winding-up (f), but will be entitled to repayment with interest before other members receive anything. To the extent of such a payment the persons paying will be relieved from their liability to contribute to the assets of the company on a winding-up even where they are directors and have passed a resolution sanctioning the arrangement, immediately before a winding-up and have paid a debt they have guaranteed (g), or their own fees (h) out of the moneys so raised. But a resolution for such a payment, after the presentation of a petition on which a winding-up order is ultimately made, is bad as changing the status of the members (i), and a resolution that moneys advanced shall be treated as paid in advance of calls if the company goes into winding-up, but otherwise as a loan is bad (k). A term in a guarantee providing that payments made under the guarantee are to be treated as payments in advance of calls, will be invalid as to payments made after winding-up (kk).

We now come to the case where shares are to be paid for otherwise than in cash. It will be necessary in this case to have an agreement between the company and the shareholder or some person through whom he claims.

As shares are not within either section 4 of the Statute of Frauds or section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (m) (which replaces section 17 of the Statute of Frauds), such contract will not necessarily be in writing, though of course it is usually so.

(l) The length of notice prescribed by the articles must be followed here.

(m) Humble v. Mitchell (1839), 11 A. & E. 205; Duncuft v. Albrecht (1841), 12 Sim. 189; The Colonial Bank v. Whinney (1886), 11 A. C. 426.

Given an agreement of this sort, a Court cannot go behind it to see whether the company has or has not received full value for its shares, unless either a case is made for setting aside the whole agreement, e.g., where the agreement was induced by fraud, or where the consideration given for the shares is illusory or admits of an obvious monetary value (n).

The reason for this rule would appear to be that the person who sells to a company may sell at his own price just as any other vendor can do, and the Court cannot make a fresh bargain for the parties (o). The question being, apart from the now repealed section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867 (p), whether at the time when payment for the shares was made there was a binding agreement to pay otherwise than in cash (q).

In the case of subscribers to the memorandum it was, except in cases where the rule in Spargo's Case (r) applies, formerly difficult, if not impossible, to arrange for the shares for which they signed to be paid for otherwise than in cash, for no binding agreement with the company to pay for such shares otherwise than in cash could be made " at or before the issue of such shares," as was required by section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867 (s).

Now, however, a payment for such shares may be made in kind (t), but it must be quite clear from the memorandum or the articles or the prospectus, or the agreement under which the shares are issued as fully paid, that the intention of the parties when such agreement was made was that the shares for which the memorandum was signed were to be part of those mentioned in the agreement, and that there was not an agreement to take shares arising from the subscription to the memorandum and a subsequent agreement by the company to issue different shares as the consideration for the property passing to the company (u). An agreement to pay for shares by goods to be supplied in the future is not, however, good, for that is substituting a simple contract debt for the specialty debt given by the statute (x), and a person who has a contract with the company to take shares, e.g. a subscriber to the memorandum, will not satisfy his liability by taking fully paid-up shares from a promoter (y). The question of whether, in the case of shares issued before the 1st of January, 1901, a contract should have been filed under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, has perhaps not entirely lost its importance with the repeal of that section, having regard to the suggestion thrown out by the Court of Appeal in one case (z) that shares issued for a consideration other than cash before the repeal of the section would not be entitled to participate with other shares in the distribution of assets on a winding-up (a).

Where, however, there is no real consideration for the issue of the shares, as where the consideration consists wholly of past services, there the allottee will hold them as shares with nothing paid on them (b), and a company is not bound to accept in payment of calls overdue coupons for the interest due on debentures, where there are or may be equities which can be set off against claims on the coupons (c). A payment made on account of the shares of more than one person will be credited to all the shares equally, and if for any reason one of such persons has wrongly been treated as being entitled to the full benefit of the payment, this will not affect the rights of the other persons (d).

RETURNS AS TO ALLOTMENTS.

A company limited by shares must within one month after making any allotment of its shares file with the Registrar of Joint Stock

(a) These remarks were based mainly on the fact that the Companies Act, 1898, which enabled the Court to give relief where s. 25 had not been complied with, was not repealed by the Act of 1900. The Act of 1898 is now repealed, and its provisions are not re-enacted; but probably the provisions of the Interpretation Act, 1889, would enable relief to be still obtained under it, and indeed resort is sometimes had to the provisions where the company is reducing its capital (see post, p. 646, note (a)). Section 33 (2) of the Act of 1900, which prohibits further proceedings under s. 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, is not happily worded.

(b) Eddystone Marine Co., [1893] 3 Ch. 9; in Re Leinster Bank Corporation, [1902] 1 Ir. 349, the Court seems to have taken the view that there was no consideration but the agreement was good, because authorised by the memorandum and articles; if this is the right view of that case, it is submitted it was wrongly decided; see also Alkaline Reduction Co. (1897), 45 W. Companies (1) a return of the allotments stating the number and nominal amount of the shares comprised in the allotment, the names, addresses, and descriptions of the allottees, and the amount if any paid or due and payable on each share ; and

(2) In the case of shares allotted as fully or partly paid-up for a consideration other than cash (e), a contract in writing constituting the title of the allottee to the allotment, together with any contract of sale, or for services or other consideration in respect of which that allotment was made, and a return stating the number and nominal amount of shares so allotted, the extent to which they are to be treated as paid-up, and the consideration for which they have been allotted (f). All such contracts must be duly stamped. Where any such contract is not reduced to writing, the company must within one month after the allotment file with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies the particulars of the contract prescribed by the Board of Trade. Such particulars must be stamped with the same stamp duty as would have been payable if the contract had been reduced to writing, and are to be deemed an instrument within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891 ; and the Registrar may, as a condition of filing the particulars, require that the duty payable thereon shall be adjudicated under section 12 of that Act (f).

It is not very clear what contracts require to be filed under this section ; it is clear that the ordinary contract between a vendor and the company, by which the vendor is to receive fully paid shares, must be filed. But what if the shares are to be allotted to the vendor or his nominees, and the vendor has certain contracts made before the incorporation of the company by which he is bound to nominate certain other parties, as taking part of the shares to be allotted to him ? Should such other contracts be filed ? It is thought that they need not, for the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies takes the view that the section is complied with where the company enters into an agreement to allot to the vendor or his nominees, and subsequently by a letter of renunciation or an agreement under hand renounces his rights in favour of a named person or agrees to let a named person have some of his shares. For all practical purposes the fact of the Registrar taking this view will be sufficient protection. Such letter of renunciation or agreement should have a 6*d*. stamp except where a letter of renunciation relates to shares of a nominal value of less than £5, when it will have a 1*d*. stamp (g).

(e) As to what is a payment in cash see Spargo's Case (1873), 8 Ch. 407, and the other cases cited therewith, supra, pp. 259 and 260.

(f) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 88. Default in complying with the provisions of this section entails a penalty of £50 for every day during which the default continues on every director, manager, secretary, or other officer who is knowingly a party to the default : ibid. An offence under the section may be prosecuted under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, but in Scotland prosecution must be at the instance of the Lord Advocate or a procurator fiscal as the Lord Advocate directs : ibid., s. 276.

Under the Act of 1867 it was not (h), and it is apparently not now necessary for the contract to show the distinctive numbers of the shares allotted (hh); but the section seems to be framed so as to do away with the decisions under section 25 of the Act of 1867, which decided that the contract to be filed need not show the name of the allottee (i), and that it was unnecessary to file preliminary contracts where the contract filed contained recitals of their contents (k).

The old decisions as to the necessity of there being a contract which is binding on the company (l), and as to a mere escrow being insufficient (m) are, it is thought, still law; but probably if there is only a contract with a trustee followed by acts of part performance which make the company bound, it will be necessary to file particulars in the same way as if the contract had not been reduced to writing (n).

The Registrar of Joint Stock Companies takes the view where a reconstruction scheme gives existing shareholders in the old company an option to take shares in the new company, it is not sufficient now as it was formerly (o), to file the reconstruction agreement. If default has been made in filing with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies within the time limited by the section any documents which require to be filed under the section, then the company or any person liable for the default may apply (p) to the Court for relief, and the Court, if satisfied that the omission to file the document was accidental or due to inadvertence or that it is just and

R.S. and H.S. (trading as S. Brothers) to the allotment to them of 2767 Ordinary Shares all of which said Shares were deemed to be fully paid up was due to inadvertence and that it is just and equitable to grant relief.

Doth pursuant to Section 6 (4) of the Companies Act 1907 Order that the time for the filing with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies of the said Returns and other Documents specified in the Schedule hereto be extended until the 2nd March 1909 and an Office Copy of this Order is to be filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies.

THE SCHEDULE BEFORE REFERRED TO.

1. The necessary return under Section 7 (a) of the Companies Act 1900 of the allotment of Shares made by the Company at a Board Meeting duly convened and held 10th December 1908.

2. An Agreement dated the 5th November 1908 and made between R.S. and W.S. of the one part and the said Company of the other part.

3. An Agreement dated 5th November 1908 and made between the said R.S. of the one part and the said Company of the other part.

4. An Agreement dated the 5th November 1908 and made between the said R.S. and H.S. of the one part and the said Company of the other part.

5. A Supplemental Agreement dated the 25th day of January 1909 and made between the said R.S. of the first part the said W.S. of the second part and the said H.S. of the third part and the said Company of the fourth part.

6. The necessary return under Section 7 (b) of the Companies Act 1900 stating the number and nominal amounts of Shares allotted as fully paid up in pursuance of the above mentioned contracts and the consideration for which the same have been allotted.

LIEN ON SHARES.

Even before articles imposing a lien on shares were contained in Table A it was well established that such a lien was good (y). Where an official quotation on the Stock Exchange is required the lien must not extend to fully paid shares.

It is, however, thought that the articles in Table A, which do give a lien on shares, may well be extended in two respects. In the first place, they may be extended so as to include not only "all moneys whether presently payable or not called or payable at a fixed time in respect of" any share, but also "all moneys, whether presently payable or not called or liable to be called or payable at a fixed time in respect to any share," thus, so far as moneys liable to be called up are concerned, preventing a mortgagee of the shares obtaining priority over the company (z).

(y) Bradford Bank v. Briggs (1886), 12 A. C. 29; Bank of Africa v. Salisbury Gold Mining Co., [1892] A. C. 29.

(z) See Borland's Trustee v. Steel Brothers, [1901] 1 Ch. 279; citing New London and Brazilian Bank v. Brocklebank (1882), 21 C. D. 302; Bradford Bank v. Briggs (1886), 12 A. C. 29, and see the cases collected

Again, there seems no reason why the lien for other moneys should not extend to shares held by joint holders and to debts due from such joint holders or any one or more of them.

The lien should extend to all dividends payable on the shares. It is thought that a transferee of the shares would, unless his transfer were registered before he had notice of any lien, take subject to a lien the company had against his transferor (a), for a lien is an equitable charge, and a member paying off the moneys charged on his shares by virtue of such a lien may avail himself of the provisions of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and call on the company to assign their lien to his nominee (b). A lien extends only to debts or liabilities of the registered owner of shares, and even a note on the register as the rights of a cestui que trust will not make it available where he is indebted to the company (c).

The articles then usually proceed to enable the directors to sell shares, which are subject to a lien on giving notice, usually a fourteen days' notice, to the person entitled to the shares or to the person entitled on the death or bankruptcy of such person. The power of sale should be in respect of sums presently payable, and there is almost always a provision as to the proceeds of any such sale which will be applied in payment of the moneys secured by the lien and presently payable, and the balance of such moneys will be paid to the person entitled to the shares at the date of the sale. In Table A (d), such balance will remain subject to any lien that exists for moneys not presently payable; but it would seem that the shares should be sold subject to the lien for sums not presently payable in respect of the shares. These articles, then, conclude with a provision for protecting the title of the purchaser of shares so sold, and sometimes they provide that the remedy of a person injured by a wrongful sale shall be in damages against the company only. A company entitled to set up a lien will not be estopped from so doing by a statement that it has no claim unless the person to whom the statement was made has altered his position because of such statement (e).

Even where the original articles contain no provision as to supra, pp. 192 et seq. Such a lien will not enable a company to gain priority for moneys advanced after notice of other advances on the shares; see Stocton Malleable Iron Co. (1875), 2 C. D. 101, as to the construction of an article giving a lien for moneys "due" to the company.

(a) The point was raised but not decided in W. Key and Son, Ltd., [1902] 1 Ch. 467, a lien will extend to any moneys or consideration to be received in respect of shares on a winding-up; General Exchange Bank (1871), 6 Ch. 818.

liens, the company may by special resolution impose a lien, and that even where such change will admittedly affect only one member of the company (f). A person entitled to some out of a block of shares, all of which are subject to a lien, may require the owner of the block to throw the charge exclusively on the other shares, and though this right will not avail against the company, it will against persons who subsequently become entitled through the owner (g).

FORFEITURE OF SHARES.

The right of forfeiture for non-payment of calls, although in some sense a reduction of capital, is recognized by the Companies (Consolidation) Act and the earlier Acts, and is therefore clearly good. Whether such a right can be made to extend to other cases, e.g. to the case of the representatives of a deceased member if and because they decline to become members, would appear to be a more difficult question; it is thought that it cannot (h).

It would seem that a power of forfeiture will not be implied (i), and the articles of association should therefore in all cases deal with the matter.

A power of forfeiture should only be used where the company does not see any prospect of recovering the moneys due in respect of the shares which it is proposed to forfeit (k); it follows that such a power cannot be used for the purpose of enabling a company to release a perfectly solvent shareholder from his liability (l). A power of forfeiture may be exercised even after the company has gone into voluntary winding-up, and meetings of contributories may be called for the purpose of appointing directors to exercise such power (m). Directors may forfeit partly paid shares after they have given a charge on the uncalled capital of the company (n). Equity will not give relief against a valid forfeiture (o).

The provisions of the articles dealing with forfeiture must be strictly followed, as any irregularity in the forfeiture (p) or even in (f) Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, [1900] 1 Ch. 656; see also Re Rowe, [1904] 2 K. B. 489, where BIGHAM, J., declined to allow a company to revalue its securities after making such an alteration.

(h) In Hope and International (1876), 4 C. D. 327, the clause really enabled an ordinary purchase of shares; in Kelk's Case (1870), 9 Eq. 107, the company was not a limited company at the time of forfeiture.

a call out of which the forfeiture arose (q) may avoid the whole forfeiture, though the usual form of article providing that acts of de facto directors shall be valid will often set on foot a forfeiture which would otherwise be bad (r). Mere delay or laches will not bar the right of a person whose shares have been forfeited to relief, for the contract to take shares being an executed one, gives a right to relief at law, and equitable defences are therefore not available to the company. Delay will, however, of course frequently be evidence of an intention to abandon the shares, and as such an intention would be a defence to an action for forfeiting shares wrongfully, evidence of delay in asserting rights will often be very important (s). It is usual for the articles to provide that where forfeited shares have been sold the purchaser shall have a good title and the right of the person aggrieved shall be in damages against the company only (t). A prospective notice that shares will be forfeited on non-payment may, without any further resolution of the directors, be good (u), but a more or less ambiguous notice of an intention to forfeit will usually be construed as a mere threat to forfeit, and as leaving the directors the option of forfeiting or not as they see fit (x), a forfeiture may be valid although the name of the person whose shares have been forfeited has not been struck off the list of members (y), and in a proper case the Court will assume that the directors have passed a valid resolution for forfeiture (z). is required in a notice of an intention to forfeit (a), a forfeiture will not be avoided merely because the directors have omitted to comply with an article requiring them to inform the person whose shares have been forfeited of the fact of such forfeiture (b). The company itself or its liquidator will in many cases be precluded from setting up that a forfeiture is invalid owing to irregularities in the forfeiture (c), and the liquidator (d) or the directors (even where there is an article allowing them to cancel a forfeiture on such terms as they think fit) cannot cancel a forfeiture without the consent of the person whose shares have been forfeited (e). A person whose shares have been forfeited is no longer liable to the company as a member, though he may, and if the articles of the company are properly drawn will, be liable as a debtor to the company for moneys presently payable to the company at the time of forfeiture in respect of the forfeited shares, including any interest on arrears of calls (f).

Moneys so received will be moneys received in respect of calls, and a person who has purchased forfeited shares discharged from all calls due prior to his purchase will consequently be entitled to the benefit of such moneys (g). In a winding-up a person whose shares have been forfeited within the year will be liable to be placed on the B list of contributories (h), and the same remark applies to a person who has within the year transferred shares which have subsequently been forfeited (i). A person who has been induced to take shares by fraudulent misrepresentations may, if such shares have subsequently been forfeited, recover moneys paid to the company in respect of the shares, even after the commencement of a winding-up (k). A person commencing an action for rescission may, if threatened with forfeiture for non-payment of calls, find himself in a difficult position, for if the action fails he may find that the shares have been forfeited and that he has lost all the moneys he has paid on the shares. In such a case, if there is really a question to be tried, an injunction restraining the company from forfeiting the shares will be granted at all events, if the plaintiff pays the amount of the calls into Court to abide the result of his action (l).

A shareholder in a company may bring an action on behalf of himself and all other shareholders of the company to annul a forfeiture (m).

The question sometimes arises whether a company can cancel forfeited, or for that matter, any issued shares; it is thought that it cannot do so, for cancellation of shares is nowhere recognized by the Acts, and cancellation of shares involves a far more real reduction than does forfeiture, for it means that there are fewer issued shares to appear on the debit side of the balance-sheet. This view is fortified by the express power given by the Act to cancel unissued shares, and the fact that in the case of forfeited shares the number of forfeited shares must appear in the annual list of members and summary required by section 26 of the Act (n). As already stated, a company may issue forfeited shares as paid up to the extent of the moneys actually paid on them before forfeiture (o), and any sums recovered in respect of such shares after forfeiture (p), but the person taking such shares will be liable to pay any balance unpaid on the shares, even if calls for such balance have been made before forfeiture (q).

RESOLUTION FOR FORFEITURE.

That the shares held by and numbered to both inclusive be and the same are hereby forfeited.

CERTIFICATES.

Certificates are the documents of title to shares, and a company will usually not register a transfer of shares unless accompanied by the certificate. It would seem, however, that as certificates are not in any sense negotiable instruments (s) the company will not be liable for registering a transfer without the production of the certificate, even where the certificate contains the usual note stating that no transfer will be registered without the production of the certificate (t) unless the company has actual notice that the transferor is not entitled to make the transfer (u). A certificate of shares should correspond with the company's register in showing what the interest of the member is; primâ facie a person entitled to have a transfer registered is entitled to a certificate in the same form as that which his predecessor had, and if his predecessor had a clean certificate he too will be entitled to one (x).

Where an official quotation on the Stock Exchange is desired, the certificates must comply with the following requirements:—

(1) They must state on their face the authority under which the company is constituted and the amount of the authorized capital of the company.

(2) They must contain a footnote to the effect that no transfer of any portion of the holding can be registered without the production of the certificate.

(3) Where the capital of the company consists of more than one class of shares of the same denomination, the distinctive numbers of the shares of each class must be printed on the face of the share certificates.

(4) All preference share certificates must bear on their face a statement of the company's capital and the conditions both as to capital and dividends under which the shares are issued (xx).

Certificates are almost invariably issued under the common seal of the company (y). A certificate under the common seal of the company specifying any share or shares or stock held by any member of the company is primâ facie evidence of the title of the member to the share or shares or stock therein specified (z). It follows that the company will be estopped from denying the title of any bonâ fide purchaser for value of shares who has acted on the strength of such a certificate, except perhaps in the case where the company has issued the certificate at the request of the person injured and the company has consequently a counter-right to claim the indemnity which arises from such a request (a) for a person who makes a request, direction, or demand to a company to act on a forged transfer (b) or a forged power of attorney (c), or it is thought on a forged certificate, will be bound to indemnify the company against the consequences of acting on his request.

Examples of this estoppel are to be found in cases where an original allottee (d) or other person (e) has in good faith purchased or lent money (f) on the strength of a statement, contained in a certificate under the common seal of the company, that the shares are fully paid when they are in fact not so; and also in cases where a bonâ fide purchaser for value has in good faith acted on a certificate issued in consequence of a forged transfer having been registered (g), or of a third party having fraudulently induced the directors of the company to affix its seal thereto (h). An estoppel of this kind may arise even where the person to whom the certificate is issued has in his character as director signed the certificate (i), and where, as in Barrow's Case (k), a purchaser with notice has acquired the shares from a person entitled to the benefit of an estoppel.

The company may be estopped by issuing a certificate under the common seal, even where the purchaser has not bought on the strength of such certificate, as, for example, where, in consequence of relying on the certificate issued, he has entered into a contract to sell the shares therein referred to (l), or has lain by and lost his remedy against his vendor (m); and a company has been held to be estopped where a transferee who has taken shares without seeing the certificate has subsequently paid a call relying on the certificate (n). In all these cases the cause of action does not arise from the company giving any warranty by the issue of a certificate, and the right of a person who has acted on the certificate arises only when the company proceeds to do or omit some act which it could not have done or omitted if such person had in fact been the true owner of the shares, e.g. on a refusal to register a transfer of the shares; that will be the date to ascertain the measure of damages (o), for damages will usually be the remedy of the person injured (p), though where a certificate for stock has been wrongly issued the company may possibly replace the true owner in his original position by purchasing fresh stock (q).

Where a bonâ fide purchaser for value has bought without seeing the certificate or has subsequently had a certificate wrongly issued, he will not be able to set up any estoppel against the company, unless he can show damage, even in cases where he has mortgaged the shares for a loan which he has subsequently paid off and his mortgagees would during the currency of the loan have been entitled to set up an estoppel against the company (r). will not give any right by way of estoppel against the company, even where the company has enabled the forger to issue it, e.g. by giving him the custody or control of its seal, for such a certificate is a mere nullity (s).

Every company must within two months after the allotment of any shares, and within the same period after the registration of a transfer of any shares, complete and have ready for delivery the certificates of the shares allotted or transferred, unless the conditions of issue otherwise provide. If default is made, the company and every director, manager, secretary, or other officer who is knowingly a party to the default will be liable to a fine not exceeding £5 for every day during which the default continues (t).

The articles of association usually provide that every member whose name is entered on the register shall be entitled to a certificate under the common seal of the company specifying the shares held by him (u); not infrequently they also provide that the certificate shall state the amount paid up thereon (x). The article also provides that in the case of joint holders of shares only one certificate shall be issued, and that delivery of such certificate to any one of such joint holders shall be delivery to all.

They also provide for the issue of a fresh certificate in the case of a certificate being worn out, lost, defaced, or destroyed on payment of a prescribed fee, and on such terms as to evidence and indemnity as the directors may prescribe (y).

TRANSFERS.

The shares or other interest of any member of a company incorporated under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, or under the earlier Acts are personal estate capable of being transferred in manner provided by the articles of the company (a). Where the articles are silent on the point, every shareholder is entitled to transfer his shares and to have the transfer registered (b). A transfer of shares can be registered even though the transferors know that the company is on the eve of winding-up (c), but where winding-up has become inevitable, directors may refuse to register further transfers (d).

On the application of the transferor of any share or other interest in a company, the company must enter in its register of members the name of the transferee in the same manner and subject to the same conditions as if the application for the entry were made by the transferee (e).

Transfers of the shares or other interest of a deceased member of a company which are made by his personal representative will, although the personal representative is not himself a member, be as valid as if he had been a member at the time of the execution of the transfer (f); and on the bankruptcy of a member his trustee may exercise the right to transfer his shares to the same extent as the bankrupt might have exercised it if he had not become bankrupt (g). Companies are usually anxious to induce persons who are entitled to shares on the death or bankruptcy of a member to become members, as in such way they will have some person (h) (viz. the personal representative or trustee in bankruptcy), and not merely an estate, liable for calls unpaid on the shares, and in consequence the articles of association usually provide that any persons entitled to shares on the death or bankruptcy of a member shall be entitled to be registered upon producing such evidence as the directors may require (i). Not infrequently further pressure is brought on such persons to register by depriving them of some of the rights of membership until they do register (k); but, where the articles place restrictions on the right to transfer, they should also place restrictions on the rights of persons entitled to register by reason of death or bankruptcy, for such persons claim by transmission, and not by transfer,

(e) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 28; it is, however, still the duty of the transferee to get the transfer registered; Skinner v. City of London Marine Insurance Co. (1885), 14 Q. B. D. 882.

(f) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 29.

(g) Bankruptcy Act, 1883, s. 50.

(h) Such person will be liable once his name is on the register, even though there is also an entry that he is a trustee or personal representative; nor does the fact that the company is a Scotch company which can enter trusts on its register make any difference: Muir v. City of Glasgow Bank (1879), 4 A. C. 337.

(i) Cp. Table A, Clause 22; and Tuticorin Cotton Press Co. (1894), 71 L. T. 723, as to the position of a Scotch sequestrator.

(k) Before registration it has been held that personal representatives are not entitled to receive notices of meetings unless of course the articles otherwise provide: Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, [1900] 1 Ch. 656, but perhaps s. 67 of the Act, which differs from the corresponding section of the Companies Act, 1862, may incorporate the provisions of Table A in such case. It would seem that, in the absence of an article to the contrary, personal representatives will have the same right of property conferred on them by the shares as would the member through whom they claim, e.g. the right to claim an allotment of shares: James v. Buena Ventura, etc., Syndicate, [1896] 1 Ch. 456, or it is thought to vote or claim dividends or capital. Cp. also New Zealand Gold v. Peacock, [1894] 1 Q. B. 622; Bombay Burmah Trading Corporation v. Smith (1894), 21 Ind. App. 139.

and such an article would in the absence of restrictions give an unqualified right to registration (l). Under such an article the company is not entitled to make an entry in its register showing the character in which the personal representative or trustee bankruptcy holds shares, and personal representatives, and, indeed, trustees generally, are entitled to decide in what order their names are to appear in the company's register (m). If, as is commonly the case, the company requires production of the probate by executors, this will only give it notice of the names and addresses of the executors, and the company cannot assume there has been a breach of trust merely because one executor who has signed a transfer purports to revoke his signature (n).

A company may always refuse to register a transfer of shares which is not properly stamped (o), and very frequently the articles give the directors power to refuse to register a transfer of shares either in all cases or in certain cases, e.g. transfers of partly paid shares to persons of whom they do not approve, or transfers of shares over which they have a lien (p), or transfers made by members who are indebted to them (q). Where the consent of the Board is requisite for a transfer, the fact that no formal consent has been given is immaterial after the transferee's name has been entered on the register (r).

Where the directors are only empowered to refuse to register transfers under certain circumstances, those circumstances must exist at the time when the transfer is presented to the company for registration ; it will be no valid reason for refusing to register a transfer that they have arisen after the transfer has been presented, but before it has actually been registered (s). But directors are always entitled to take a reasonable time before registering a transfer (t), and they usually give notice to the member holding the shares specified in the transfer that a transfer has been lodged for registration; they do not owe any one a duty to do this (u), but it is a wise precaution to take, as it may protect them from registering a forged transfer and issuing a certificate by which they may eventually be estopped. If the directors of a company have power to refuse to register transfers, either generally (x) or in certain cases (y), they will not be bound to give their reasons for declining to register a transfer, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary a Court will assume that they have exercised their powers reasonably and bonâ fide, but, like all other powers conferred on directors, a power to refuse to register transfers is a fiduciary power, and on evidence that it has been exercised improperly (z) the Court will intervene, and in a proper case it will make an order for rectification of the register under section 32 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (a). De facto directors (b) or directors interested in the transfer (c) can concur in passing a transfer. When the directors are empowered to refuse to register a transfer to a person whom they do not approve, they cannot decline to register a transfer merely because they wish to keep all the shares of the company in one family, nor can they in such case refuse to register all nominees of the person proposed without even knowing who they are (d), for even if the person proposed be himself objectionable, a desirable nominee may be produced, and the company will only be concerned with the person actually on the register (e). Further, where there is such an article they cannot refuse to register any transfer (z) The Court will not assume directors are acting improperly merely because the proposed transferee has recently been admitted as a member in respect of other shares: North City Milling Co., [1909] 1 Ir. 179.

(a) The fact that the approval of the directors is a condition precedent to registration is no impediment to relief under the section where the directors have acted improperly, for the shareholders' right of transfer is absolute except so far as it is diminished by contract: Poole v. Middleton (1861), 29 Beav. 646; and the directors' power of refusal is apparently gone where they have exercised it improperly: Bell Bros. (1891), 65 L. whatsoever (f), or to refuse to register transfers because they are made with a view to increasing the voting power of the transferor by putting the shares into the names of nominees (g); nor will such a power justify a refusal to sanction a transfer because the transferor is indebted to the company in cases where the company has no lien for the debt (h), or because the transferee has given a false address unless perhaps he has given it fraudulently (i); and the directors cannot refuse to register a transfer without considering or discussing the matter (k).

But if the transferee is interested in a rival company (l), or being already a shareholder has involved the company in vexatious litigation (m), these would seem reasons for refusing to register the transfer. It may be pointed out that these are all cases where the right to refuse registration is limited to a particular reason, namely, non-approval of the transferee. Even where the power to refuse is absolute, it is still a fiduciary power, and must be exercised bonâ fide in the interests of the company (n). A right to refuse to register transfers given by the articles of a company will not be affected by a vesting order (o).

Directors can deprive themselves of their right to refuse to register a transfer; for instance, if they agree to register a transfer if a call is paid, they cannot refuse to register it if the call is paid (p), and where the articles require them to give a certificate before registering transfers, and they have not done this, they cannot after registration of transferees turn round and impeach the registration (q).

A contract for the sale of shares on the Stock Exchange is not conditional on the company allowing the purchaser to become a complete member by admitting him to its register (r), but the vendor under such a contract may not do anything to prevent the purchaser from being registered (s); if the purchaser is not registered, he will be liable to indemnify the vendor against all calls that may be made on the shares after the transfer (t). Where directors have refused to register a transfer they are not bound to give notice of the fact to the transferor (u). A provision in the articles of association requiring members to transfer their shares does not offend against the rule against perpetuities, even though the transfer may have to be made at a date exceeding a life or lives in being and twenty-one years, after the time when the contract of membership was entered into; and a clause requiring a transfer at a fixed price if the member goes bankrupt is not contrary to the bankruptcy laws (v). A private company must restrict "the right to transfer its shares" (x); presumably the restriction required is on the right to have transfers of shares registered, for the mere transfer, apart from its registration, in no way concerns the company. It would, moreover, seem as the section is silent on the subject that an absolute restriction is not necessary, any restriction which applies to all the shares of the company, or at all events any restriction which enables the company to limit the number of its members, would seem sufficient. Nor does there seem to be anything to prevent such a company having one form of restriction for one class of its members and another for another class.

With regard to the form which transfers of shares have to take, this is entirely a matter for the articles; occasionally the articles provide that transfers must be by deed. But such a provision is not desirable, as it is common for holders of shares to borrow money on their shares by depositing the certificates with a blank transfer

C. 139, does not seem to apply: a trustee in bankruptcy is not liable either personally or out of the assets to indemnify the bankrupt against calls; Levi v. Ayres (1878), 3 A. C. 842.

(i.e. the name of the transferee not being filled in) with the lender; in such a case, if the transfer requires to be by deed, the lender cannot validly fill in the name of the transferee, for that will not make the deed so completed the deed of the borrower, and the company can refuse to register the transferee (y), and even where it has registered him he will be postponed to persons who have a prior equity (z). On the other hand, if the articles only require transfers to be by instruments in writing, even if a transfer bear a seal and the company has been accustomed to require transfers to be by deed, the lender will be entitled to fill up the blank and to demand registration of the transfer as fully as he could have done if the blank had originally been filled up (a); but even where the articles do not require transfers to be by deed, a third party who takes a blank transfer from the original lender will have no higher title than such lender had, and cannot fill up the transfer for purposes foreign to the original contract (b); but if the transfer is filled up before he gets it and without his knowledge, the transferee will, even where the transfer must be by deed, get a good title to the shares free from any claim by the person who gave the blank transfer (c). The commonest form of article requires transfers to be executed by the transferor and transferee, and sets out that transfer must either be in any usual or common form or in the form set out in the articles, such form being itself a very common form (d). For the purposes of an official quotation on the Stock Exchange, this would appear to be enough, for all that is requisite is that the articles should provide that the common form of transfer shall be used.

(c) Union Credit v. Mersey, [1899] 2 Q. B. 305; though this case does not relate to blank transfers of shares it seems to establish the above proposition; see also Balkis Consolidated Co. (1888), 58 L. T. 300.

(d) Table A, Clauses 18 and 19.

Where the articles are silent on the subject, it would seem that the form of transfer will be governed by established custom of the company, and that the company may decline to register a transfer not in the form usually used on transfers of its shares (e).

Even the Court in a winding-up cannot dispense with the provisions of the articles dealing with the form which transfers are to take (f), and a fortiori the directors cannot do so, but if there is some slight and immaterial variation from such form that will not be enough to entitle the directors to refuse registration (g). Thus where the address is omitted (g), or even a wrong address (h), or a wrong description (i) is without fraudulent intent given if there is no doubt who the person in question is, this will not invalidate a transfer, even in cases where the form of transfer sanctioned by the articles requires the address to be given; nor will the fact that the numbers of the shares are wrongly given or are not given in the transfer, where the intention to assign the number of shares specified in the transfer and the intention to accept such shares is manifest, for directions as to the distinguishing numbers of the shares being inserted are simply directory, so as to enable the company to trace the titles to the different shares (k). Of course very different questions would arise where it is doubtful whether the shares to be transfered belong to one class or another.

The mere non-execution of a transfer by the transferee will not, even though his execution is required by the articles, render the transfer void (l).

Where the consideration is wrongly stated this will not invalidate the transfer, or prevent the property in the shares transferred from passing (m); but the directors may go behind a transfer and ascertain what the consideration really is, and if, as the result of such inquiries, they ascertain that a transfer is not properly stamped, they may decline to register the transfer (n). Where directors are entitled to demand such evidence as they think fit of the right of the

It may be that s. 74 of the Finance (1909–1910) Act, 1910, which deals with voluntary conveyances, will increase the duties of directors and secretaries. The circulars issued by the Inland Revenue Commissioners in April, 1910, and June, 1910, cited in Alpe, 12th ed. p. 43, suggest that inquiry ought to be made in all cases where there is a transfer for a nominal consideration.

transferor to transfer, they may require his certificate to be left with the company for their inspection (o). The stamps on transfers are the same as were those on conveyances on sale, before the latter were doubled by the Finance (1909–1910) Act, 1910 (p). Directors cannot, as against an innocent transferor, rely on their own default in not passing a transfer (q).

In lieu of the old writ of distringas a notice in lieu of distringas may now be given by any person claiming to be interested in any stock or shares standing in the books of a company. Such person or his solicitor must make an affidavit in the prescribed form (r), with such variations as circumstances may require, and such affidavit and a notice also in the prescribed form (s) must be filed at the central office, and an office copy of the affidavit with a duplicate of the notice authenticated by the seal of the central office must be served on the company. A note must be appended to the affidavit stating on whose behalf it is filed and to what address any notices are to be sent (t).

If after such a notice the company receives a request to transfer the stock or shares or for payment of dividends, it must give notice by sending a prepaid letter through the post to the person interested, at the address given; but the company cannot by reason of any such notice decline to register a transfer or to pay dividends for more than eight days from receiving a request so to do without the order of a Court or Judge (u), and any person who has given such a notice must on receiving the notice from the company forthwith apply for an injunction.

In spite of these elaborate rules, and the provisions of the Act preventing a company from entering notices on its register (x), it has been held that a company cannot register a transfer of shares if it has notice of an adverse claim to the shares comprised in such transfer, even though no notice in lieu of distringas has been given (y).

It was not said for how long a company was bound to hold up a transfer because of such notice, but it would seem that the proper course for a company receiving such a notice is to inform the person giving it that they will register the transfer unless he takes legal proceedings (z).

A judgment creditor may obtain a charging order against stock or shares in which the judgment debtor is beneficially interested. Such an order is usually made on ex parte summons, and is made as an order nisi in the first instance, and has the same effect as a notice in lieu of distringas on being served on the company; it is then either made absolute or discharged. But no proceedings can be taken to enforce such an order until six months after the date of the order (a); it must then be made in a fresh action specially brought to enforce it (b). A charging order will give the chargee no higher rights than the person against whom the order was made had (c) at the date of the order nisi (d).

The measure of damages for a wrongful refusal to register a transfer of shares is the difference between the price of the shares when the transferee ultimately gets them and what he would have got for them if his transfer had been registered in due time, and he had realized them prudently as soon as he could do so after that time, but at the same time without being too hasty about realization; the number of shares comprised in the transfer and the prices ruling at the time when it should have been registered and all other surrounding circumstances must be taken into account (e).

On a contract for the sale of shares on the Stock Exchange, if part only of the shares comprised in a certificate form the subject of the sale, it is usual for the certificate to be sent with the transfer for certification, and on receipt of such transfer and certificate the secretary or other proper officer of the company marks the transfer with the words "certificate lodged." Unless a transfer is duly accompanied by the certificate relating to the shares comprised therein, or is certificated, the rules of the Stock Exchange provide that the purchaser may refuse to pay for his shares. The certificate is then retained by the company, and in its place fresh certificates are issued. Such certification is not ultra vires on the part of the company, as it facilitates dealings with the company's shares, and this is likely to benefit the company (f).

The giving of this certificate only amounts to a representation that documents have been lodged with the company which are apparently in order, and which primâ facie show the transferor's title to transfer, and it does not imply a warranty of the transferor's title or of the validity of the certificate, and the company will not be estopped if a transfer is certificated where no share certificate has been lodged, if the certificate is in fact with the company at the time when the transfer is left with it and shows a title to transfer the shares, which in fact the transferor had not got; as, for instance, where he has previously transferred the shares to a person who has not got a fresh certificate, for in such case the person who has acted on the certification would have been equally misled if it were true that the certificate had been lodged and is really damaged by the lack of title in his transferor, and not by the certification (f). Moreover, if the officer of the company, whose duty it is to certify transfers, returns the transfer after certification to the transferor, the company will not be liable to persons who subsequently deal with the transferor on the faith of his having the certificate and without knowledge of the certification (h). If it is the duty of the secretary of the company to certify transfers, the company will not be liable to an action for deceit if the secretary fraudulently and for his own ends certificates the transfer, where no certificate has been lodged, nor will the company in such case be liable by estoppel if, as is usually the case, its secretary is a mere servant, and in no sense its general agent, and the misrepresentation is consequently not made by the company (i). The company will, however, apparently be liable by estoppel if a transfer of fully paid shares is certificated where the shares transferred are not fully paid up, even if no certificate has been lodged or if the certificate lodged is silent as to whether the shares are fully paid up or not (k). It would seem, now, that this decision, if good law, can only apply where there is no fraud, unless owing to exceptional circumstances the fraud can be attributed to the company (i); and it would seem to follow that the company will be estopped where its secretary negligently certificates a transfer, which is shown by the certificate relating to the shares comprised therein to be out of order, whether such certificate is or is not lodged with the transfer.

C. 117, though it is there pointed out that this latter case was a case of the secretary being fraudulent. Lord MACNAGHTEN and Lord JAMES at pp. 126, 133, and 134, both say that the company will not be estopped where the secretary certificates a transfer and no certificate has in fact been lodged.

Where there is a conflict of rights between two innocent parties claiming shares, the general rules are (1) that the person who has the complete legal title to the shares or who has as between himself and the company an unconditional right to be registered will have priority ; (2) where both parties have only equitable rights the person whose equity is prior in point of time prevails.

Both these rules are, however, liable to be displaced by the conduct of the parties in a given case.

With regard to (1), it has been doubted whether anything but the complete legal title will prevail (l), and it seems to be the case that nothing short of registration will protect a person where the company has a discretion as to registration, as, for instance, where no complete and properly stamped transfer has been delivered to the secretary of a company governed by the Companies Clauses Act, 1845 (m), or where the company's deed provides that no person shall be registered as a member until he has executed the company's deed and no offer to do so has been made, or where the articles regulate transfers in any way (n).

Again, where certificates contain a note that no transfer will be registered without the production of the certificate relating to the shares comprised therein, a person who puts forward a transfer unaccompanied by the necessary certificate has not an unconditional right to be registered, at all events unless he can prove the loss or destruction of his certificate (o), although probably the company would not incur any liability if it registered the transfer without the production of the certificate (p), unless, of course, it had notice at the time of registration of the prior claim of some other person with whom the certificate had been deposited as security for money or otherwise (q).

legal title to shares will be postponed to persons having a higher equity only if they knew, or must be taken to have known, of such equity before they acquired the legal title (s), or if they have subsequently estopped themselves from relying on it (t) ; but if the company knew of the equity at the time of registration, but nevertheless registered the transfer, it may apparently rectify its register so as to relegate the transferee to the position he would have held if he had never been registered (u). A person cannot avail himself of a legal title which he has got in after he has notice of prior equities (x) or where he has acted negligently (y).

Where shares are held by trustees who have no authority to sell, if they transfer to a purchaser for value without notice (z) and the transferee is registered or obtains an unconditional right to be registered, the title of the transferee will prevail over that of the cestuis qui trustent, but the title of the cestuis qui trustent will prevail if asserted before the transferee is in such position (a), unless they have in any way estopped themselves from asserting their rights.

Persons interested in shares will be held to have estopped themselves against a bonâ fide purchaser for value without notice (including, of course, a mortgagee (b)) where they have authorized a sale or a mortgage, even though there is a limitation on the power which is so conferred, and regard is not had to such limitation (c) unless it has come to the knowledge of the purchaser before he has paid his money, and on this principle it has been held that an agent authorized to sell can, if his principal has executed a transfer to him, give a good title to a mortgagee (d), and that a principal who at the bidding of his agent has executed a transfer to a bank, which is in the habit of lending money on, but not of purchasing shares of the nature of those comprised in, the transfer, will be estopped from denying that such transfers confer a good security on the bank for money lent (e), for although an agent for sale has not usually authority to mortgage (f), the only limit of authority which can be recognized where there is a written document is, in the absence of express notice, the document itself (g); and, indeed, the rule itself scarcely seems to hold good in the case of a broker to whom a client has transferred stock (h).

A receipt clause in a transfer will, if there has been a sale, protect a person relying on it against the vendor's lien of a principal, even though the consideration has never passed, the reason for this being because the person relying on it will have the higher equity, and not because of any doctrine of estoppel (i). If there has in fact been no sale and no money has passed, the principal will not be barred by a receipt given by his agent from showing such fact, even in cases where if he had given the receipt himself there would be an estoppel against him (k). The ordinary statement in a transfer that the money has been paid is as effectual an acknowledgment as the ordinary conveyancing receipt (l).

It is possible that a trustee is in this respect in a different position to an agent, and that the mere fact that a person has taken a transfer in the name of a trustee will not prevent his setting up his rights against even a purchaser for value without notice who has not obtained a legal title to the shares (m); and a person who has once been an agent for sale will, when he ceases to have authority to sell, be in the same position as though he had been in the position of a trustee, and not an agent for sale of the shares (n).

them to a purchaser for value without notice, it follows that the true owner's rights will be postponed to those of such purchaser, even though the bonds be not negotiable instruments (o).

These cases are all based on estoppel, but to found such an estoppel there must not merely be conduct of culpable neglect calculated to lead others, and in fact leading them, to believe in a certain state of circumstances, but the neglect must be in the transaction itself, and must be of some duty owed by the person guilty of neglect towards the person who has suffered or towards the general public or some class of the public to whom such person belongs (p), and must be the proximate cause of the loss. Thus the mere fact that a company has allowed its secretary to have the custody of its seal and has thereby enabled him to transfer stock under a forged power of attorney purporting to bear such seal (q) or to issue certificates fraudulently (r) will not prevent the company from establishing that an innocent purchaser for value has no title to the stock or the shares mentioned in the certificates; and a person who has given his broker transfers which are blank with regard to the descriptions of the shares to be transferred and has left the certificates of shares other than those he intended to transfer with such broker will not be precluded from showing that the broker has fraudulently and contrary to his instructions filled up the blanks in the transfers with the descriptions of such other shares (s); nor will a company be precluded from denying the title of a purchaser of shares where the certificate relating to the shares has been deposited with it and it has negligently allowed it to be handed to the wrong person (t).

Where a company has registered a forged transfer it will have to replace the original owner of the shares transferred in the position he occupied before the transfer was registered (u); but it will be entitled to be indemnified, as is above stated (x), by the person who put forward the forged transfer. The cause of action in such case arises when the company first declines to treat the person whose name has been wrongfully removed from the register as the owner of the stock or shares which have been wrongfully transferred, and the Statute of Limitations will not commence to run till then (u). fact that the company sends a notice to the owner of shares informing him that there has been an application to transfer his shares and stating that the shares will be transferred unless they hear from him to the contrary will not protect the company if they do register a forged transfer (y).

Where shares are registered in the joint names of several executors (z), they must all be parties to a transfer even where the register contains a note that they are executors (a).

Companies (b) who issue or have issued shares, stock, or securities transferable by an instrument or by an entry in any books or register kept on their behalf have power to make compensation by a cash payment out of their funds for any loss arising from a transfer of any such shares or securities in pursuance of a forged transfer or of a transfer under a forged power of attorney whether such loss arises and whether the transfer or power of attorney was forged before or after the passing of the Forged Transfers Act, 1891, and whether the person receiving compensation or any person through whom he claims has or has not paid any fee or otherwise contributed to any fund out of which the compensation is paid (c). A company may, if it thinks fit, provide either by fees not exceeding the rate of 1*s*. on every £100 transferred with a minimum charge equal to that for £25 to be paid by the transferee upon the entry of the transfer in the books of the company, or by insurance, reservation of capital, accumulation of income, or in any other manner which they may resolve upon, a fund to meet claims for compensation (d).

For the purpose of providing such compensation any company may borrow on the security of its property (e), and may impose such reasonable restrictions on the transfer of their shares, stocks, or securities or with respect to powers of attorney for the transfer thereof, as it may consider requisite for guarding against losses arising by forgery (f). A company which makes compensation under these Acts for any loss arising from forgery has without prejudice to any other right or remedy the same right or remedy against

Where a transfer of shares has been made and nothing remains to be done to complete the transaction, such transaction can only be set aside if fraud is proved (h).

DIVIDENDS.

We have already considered the question of what funds a company can make available for dividend. We now come to the question of the provisions of the articles on the subject and of the distribution of the dividends among the members.

Not infrequently the articles provide that dividends shall only be paid out of the profits of the business of the company (i), thus preventing accretions to capital from being divided, and in other cases they provide that dividends shall only be paid out of profits (k), thus requiring the company to make good any losses of capital it may have suffered (l).

It is almost an invariable rule (m) that no shareholder is entitled to any share of the profits of the company until a dividend has been declared (n), and where this is the case even a preference shareholder cannot in a winding-up claim for arrears of his dividend out of profits which have been earned if no dividend has been declared (o), and the declaration of a dividend is a condition precedent to an action.

Usually the articles provide that the company in general meeting may declare a dividend, but that such dividend shall not exceed the amount recommended by the directors (p), or that the directors may with the sanction of the company in general meeting declare a dividend (q). If they empower the company to declare a dividend at the ordinary general meeting and require the accounts to be submitted to such meeting, no final dividend can be declared at an extraordinary general meeting (qq). The articles usually also enable the directors to declare or pay interim dividends (r), under such an article even where an interim dividend has been declared and the funds to meet it set aside, the company can decide not to pay the dividend (s).

The articles also usually provide that the directors may before recommending or declaring a dividend set aside part of the profits to a reserve fund and empower them to apply such fund for the purposes of meeting contingencies, equalizing dividends, and other purposes (t). Even without such an article, however, the directors may, unless the articles are very special, set aside part of their profits or even all their profits to a reserve fund, and may invest such fund in any investments (of course, other than the shares of the company) which they consider desirable (u). Where the reserve fund has been invested and employed in the business of the company, the Court will usually be slow to take the view that it has been, so to speak, dedicated to capital, so as not to be available for distribution as profits in succeeding years (x). As between tenant for life and remainderman, the tenant for life is entitled to all profits distributed unless the company has validly capitalized them by resolution or otherwise (y), but where the trustees have an option of taking cash or fully or partly paid shares, and they elect to take the shares, such shares will belong to capital (z). Apart from a special article—and it is desirable that there should be such an article—directors must pay dividends in cash, and not in shares, debentures, or any other form of specie (a). Such payments would, however, appear unobjectionable where authorized by the articles (b), but of course the amount credited as paid up on the shares must not exceed the amount of the dividend. Dividends are apportionable as between a tenant for life and remainderman, and it is doubtful whether any provision in the articles would be enough to exclude the provisions of the Apportionment Act, 1870 (c). Before paying any dividend companies must pay the income tax payable by them. Broadly speaking, any company residing (d) in England must pay income tax on the profits of every business carried on by them either wholly or partly in England (e), but not on the profits of any business carried on wholly abroad (f); a company will, however, have to pay on foreign investments, even where the profits are not actually received in England, if it carries on business there (g). For this purpose the fact that a company resident in England owns all the shares of a foreign company will not make the business of the foreign company the business of the English company, unless the foreign company is a mere nominis umbra; such shares will be simply foreign investments of the English company (h). Where a company is not resident in England it pays income tax only on the profits of any business carried on there (i). A company cannot claim either the exemptions given to persons of small income, even when its income is such as would entitle an individual to a remission of the whole or part of the tax (k), or the benefit of the provisions of the Income Tax Acts as to earned incomes (kk). On the other hand companies are not liable to super-tax (kkk).

The rule in the absence of any article dealing with the distribution of dividends would seem to be that they must be distributed amongst the members (l) in proportion to the nominal value of their shares, and irrespective of the amounts paid up on their shares (m).

The provisions in Table A of the Schedule to the Companies Act, 1862 (n), that dividends shall be paid to members in proportion to their shares in effect usually carried this out (o), for it is very rare where shares are not divided into different classes to find shares of different nominal amounts in the same company, except where some of the shares have been consolidated or subdivided, and where some, but not all, the shares of a company have been consolidated or subdivided, a consolidated share would probably for the purpose of such an article be reckoned as entitled to the same amount of dividend as the shares which have been consolidated into such one share would have been entitled to before consolidation, and where a share has been subdivided into several shares such shares would together be entitled to the same dividend as the original share (p).

The Act, however, provides (q) that a company may, if authorized by its articles, pay dividends in proportion to the amount paid up on each share, where a larger amount is paid up on some shares than others; and it is very common for a company to provide for this by its articles. Table A, which adopts this form of article with a modification (r), goes on to provide that no amount paid on a share in advance of calls shall while carrying interest be treated as paid on the share. The provision is, however, it is thought, unnecessary, for such payments are not made by a member in his character of member, but he is a creditor in respect of them (s), and the articles only form a contract between (t), and dividends are in the absence of provision to the contrary only payable to members; further, a contract to pay sums in advance would seem to negative any right to dividends. It may be argued that sums which have been paid by persons after the forfeiture of their shares under a provision of the articles have been paid in respect of the shares (u), but the answer to this is that it is quite clear, taking the act as a whole (x), that the capital of the company consists of the amounts paid up on shares and the amounts unpaid on shares, these expressions having in effect a technical meaning, and that amounts paid up in advance of calls do not form part of such capital (y), otherwise interest could not be paid on them where the company has no fund available for dividend. There is nothing, however, to prevent a company receiving amounts in advance of calls as part of their paid up capital; but in this case dividends and not interest would be payable (a).

Frequently the capital of companies is divided into more than one class of shares, and one of such classes is entitled to a dividend at a specified rate on the nominal amount or on the amount paid up on the shares, such dividend to be paid before the other class of shares gets anything. In such case the preferential dividend is primâ facie cumulative (b), i.e. if the profits of any year or years are not sufficient to pay the full dividend the holders of the shares carrying such dividend will, out of the profits of subsequent years, be entitled to have the deficiency made good before the holders of the other shares get anything; and where each class of shares is to get a dividend at a specified rate, and the balance of profits is to be divided among the two classes, both the fixed dividends will be cumulative (c), the principle being that the word dividend means a rateable proportion of the profits of the company, and not of its profits in a particular year. Where, however, the fixed dividend is to be paid out of the yearly profits (d) or the net profits of each year (e), it will be non-cumulative. Income tax will, of course, have to be deducted before paying the fixed dividend, and the shareholders entitled to such dividend will not, as against the other shareholders, be entitled to more than their fixed dividend less such income tax (f); but it will, it seems, be different where the contract to take shares is an English contract—if a foreign or colonial income tax is imposed after the shares have been issued, in such case the preference shareholders are entitled to get their dividend without deducting such foreign or colonial income tax before the ordinary shareholders get anything (g).

In well-drawn articles the lien on shares given to the company extends to dividends that may be declared (h). Sometimes the articles give the company a power of forfeiting dividends that have not been drawn for a certain period (i) (e.g. three years); but the Stock Exchange committee will not grant an official quotation where the articles contain such a clause (k). Apart from such a clause, the debt created by the declaration of a dividend will be statute barred twenty years after the dividend has been declared (l);

the articles also usually contain a clause providing that no dividend shall bear interest against the company (m) and for notice of dividends being given, and they also enable the company to pay a dividend to any one of joint holders (n).

It is within the competence of directors who have the powers usually conferred on directors to decide how, and within reasonable limits when, a dividend shall be payable, and if they decide to pay a dividend by cheque or dividend-warrant sent through the post, the posting of the cheque or dividend-warrant will amount to payment of the dividend, even if it is lost in the post. Moreover, where a meeting sanctions a dividend with notice that the company proposes to pay it in this way, there the members impliedly request that the dividend shall be so paid, and this by itself will be enough to exonerate the company from liability for loss in the post (o). The person entitled to the dividend will usually be entitled to a fresh cheque or warrant for his dividend under section 69 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, on indemnifying the company against all persons whatever in case the cheque or warrant is found again (p). This decision is not altogether easy to follow, and it may be wise to have an article dealing with the matter.

Where a dividend is declared between the date of a contract for sale of shares and the transfer, it will be payable to the transferee if the contract be silent on the point (q).

VOTES.

The number of votes and the voting power given to each share is a matter which is regulated by the articles of association of each company. If the articles are silent on the subject, each member has one vote, however many shares he may happen to have (r). The usual provision, however, is to give each member one vote for every share he holds, though frequently certain classes of shares, e.g. preference shares, are not given a vote or are only given a vote on certain specified matters. Votes are a right of property, and a member may exercise his votes at a meeting of the company in such way as he pleases, and without regard to the interests of the company (s). Thus a member may vote on the question of the company entering into contracts with himself, and such a contract will be binding on the company even in cases where the person interested holds a majority of the votes in the company (t). Moreover, a member may contract to use his vote in a particular way on all future occasions, and will be bound by such contract even when he holds his shares as trustee (u). No doubt there is a limit to the powers of those holding a majority of the votes in a company; such limit is hard to define, but it seems to come to this—a majority cannot bind a majority either (1) where what they propose to do is outside the powers of the whole company in such case any one shareholder can obtain an injunction to restrain the company from doing the ultra vires act (x), or (2) where the act proposed amounts to a fraud on or an interference with the rights of property of the minority. In such case the action must be brought by the plaintiff suing on behalf of himself and all other shareholders of the defendant company other than such as are made defendants (e.g. the directors) and the company is made a defendant (y). Such an action is maintainable where shareholders holding a majority of votes decline to take steps to upset a fraudulent contract (z), or where the majority are forcing through a reconstruction scheme which sacrifices the interests of the minority (a). In the cases now under consideration the company is the proper plaintiff, and the shareholder suing must show that it has declined to take action (b). Discovery can be obtained against the company (c), but it would not seem right to cast it in damages or costs, for the gist of the action is that the company has been injured by the wrongful acts of the majority.

A third exception to the general rule seems to be that a mere majority of the company cannot do anything prohibited by the articles (d).

But putting aside these exceptions, the general rule is that the Court will not interfere in the management of the company unless the company itself is the plaintiff (e). In one case it was held that the Court would not interfere though the company had not strictly followed the provisions of its articles, and though an invalid notice of a meeting to pass an extraordinary resolution to alter the articles had been given, the Court declined to interfere in an action by a minority (f), and in similar actions it has declined to prevent the directors from setting aside a fund to reserve before declaring a dividend (g) to restrain a company from extending its business in a manner not originally contemplated (h) or to interfere with the ruling of a chairman on the question whether there could be a poll on a question of adjournment (i). On special and extraordinary resolutions the rule always was that members and only members could vote, and any provision in the articles or otherwise enabling non-members (e.g. debenture holders) to vote was invalid (k); this depended on the terms of the Statute, and it is not thought that the provisions of the present section make any difference as they still only enable members to vote although "persons entitled according to the articles to vote" are allowed to demand a poll (l). For this purpose the word members means the persons who are on the company's register of members and who have agreed to become members (m); but the provisions of Table A seem to indicate that it may include other persons who represent members. Thus a lunatic or person of unsound mind may vote by his committee curator bonis or other person in like position (n). It is thought that the articles may provide for an infant voting by his guardian, and it would seem that, apart from special provisions to the contrary, the executors or administrators of a deceased member or the trustee in bankruptcy of a bankrupt member may exercise the voting rights of the deceased or bankrupt member (o). Further, the Act provides (p) that a company which is a member of another company may by resolution of its directors authorize any of its officials or any other person to act as its representative at any meeting of that other company, and that the person so authorized shall be entitled to exercise the same powers on behalf of the company which he represents as if he were an individual shareholder of that other company. The articles may also confer on bearers of share warrants the same right of voting as if they were members (q). It must be borne in mind that the ordinary method of voting is by a show of hands, but that a poll may be demanded either by the number of persons necessary for that purpose under the articles, or if the articles are silent on the subject by any one member (r). On a show of hands the chairman has, except under very exceptional articles, only to count the number of hands held up; he cannot take any count either of the number of votes each person may be entitled to (s) or of the proxies he may hold (t). These matters may only be taken into account on a poll. No member is entitled to vote by proxy unless the articles of association authorize such voting (u); but they usually do contain such a provision (x). They also usually provide for the form of proxy necessary, usually setting out such form, and not infrequently they provide that only persons who are themselves members and entitled to vote shall be entitled to act as proxies (y). Usually in such cases the articles require that proxies shall be deposited at the registered offices of the company, a certain time before the meeting at which they are intended to be used (z). It would seem that under the common form of article requiring proxies to be members, membership at the date when the proxy is to be used is all that is necessary (a). A member using proxies which have been given to him is not required to state who has given him the proxies (b), though this will presumably appear from the proxies themselves.

The provisions of the articles with reference to proxies must be strictly complied with, and directors or others counting votes at meetings should reject proxies which are not in accordance with such requirements, e.g. unattested proxies, where the articles say proxies are to be attested (c). Letters and powers of attorney for the purpose of appointing a proxy to vote and proxies for voting at one meeting or at an adjournment thereof must be stamped with a duty of one penny before execution, and they must state the day upon which the meeting at which they are intended to be used is to be held. The duty may be denoted by an adhesive stamp, which must be cancelled by the person executing the instrument (d). Although such a proxy must be stamped before execution, the operative parts may be filled in after stamping and execution (e). A proxy that authorizes a vote at the next meeting without specifying the day will be bad, on the ground that it does not comply with the provisions of the Stamp Act (f).

Any one who makes or executes or votes or attempts to vote under or by means of any such letter or power of attorney or voting-paper which is not duly stamped will incur a fine of £50, and every vote given or tendered under the authority or by means of the letter or power of attorney or voting-paper will be void (g). Proxies in which the day of meeting is not named may be stamped after execution with a 10*s*. stamp (h). Directors may send stamped proxy papers to members of the company filled up with their own names as proxies, and may pay for the printing, stamping, and posting of such papers out of the funds of the company (i). A person who has given a proxy may verbally authorize the person to whom it is given or any other person to fill in blanks (k).

The articles usually contain provisions dealing with the question of which of several joint holders of shares is to vote (l), and they not infrequently provide that persons who have not paid all calls or other sums presently payable by them in respect of their shares shall not be entitled to vote (m). Even where there is such an article, the Court will not in the absence of evidence of an improper motive in making a call restrain directors from enforcing a call until after a meeting to decide whether they are to continue in office is held, and the Court cannot direct that the votes of persons who have not paid a call shall be counted (n).

SHARE WARRANTS.

A company limited by shares may, if authorized by its articles, with respect to any fully paid shares or to stock, issue under its common seal a warrant stating that the bearer of the warrant is entitled to the shares or stock therein specified, and may provide by coupons or otherwise for the payment of the future dividends on the shares or stock included in the warrant (o).

A stock or share warrant entitles the bearer to the share or stock therein specified, and such shares or stock may be transferred by delivery of the warrant (p), and a stock or share warrant is, by mercantile usage, a negotiable instrument (q).

The bearer of a share warrant is, subject to the articles of the company, entitled on surrendering it for cancellation to have his name entered as a member in the company's register of members; and the company is responsible for any loss incurred by any person by reason of the company entering in its register the name of a bearer of a share or stock warrant in respect of the shares or stock therein specified without the warrant being surrendered and cancelled (r). Where the articles of a company contain provisions authorizing the issue of share or stock warrants, the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies will not register the company as a private company, presumably on the ground that it is impossible to restrict the transfer of shares or stock comprised in a share or stock warrant. The bearer of a stock or share warrant is apparently not a member, but he may, if the articles so provide, be deemed to be a member within the meaning of the Act, either to the full extent or for any purposes defined in the articles; except that the shares or stock specified in the warrant may not be reckoned as or towards any qualification for being a director or manager of the company (s).

(m) Table A, Clause 63. Such an article must be carefully drawn, otherwise a purchaser of forfeited shares may as in Randt Gold Mining Co. v. Wainwright, [1901] 1 Ch. 181, find he is not entitled to vote owing to the default of his predecessor.

(s) Ibid., s. 37 (4).

On the issue of a share or stock warrant the company must strike out of its register of members the name of the member then entered therein as holding the shares or stock specified in the warrant as if he had ceased to be a member, and must enter in the register the following particulars, namely :—

(i.) The fact of the issue of the warrant.

(ii.) A statement of the shares or stock included in the warrant, distinguishing each share by its number ; and

(iii.) The date of the issue of the warrant.

Until the warrant is surrendered, the above particulars are deemed to be the particulars required by the Act to be entered in the register of members ; and on the surrender the date of the surrender must be entered as if it were the date at which a person ceased to be a member (t).

After the issue of a share warrant the summary required by the Act must show—

(i.) the total amount of shares or stock for which share warrants are outstanding at the date of the return ; and

(ii.) the total amount of share warrants issued and surrendered respectively since the last return ; and

(iii.) the number of shares or amount of stock comprised in each warrant (u).

The articles usually enable the directors to issue share warrants on the request of the registered holders of fully paid shares and on payment of the fee prescribed by the articles or settled by the directors, and also the stamp duty (x). They also usually provide for the surrender of share or stock warrants, and for the rights to which the holders of such stock or share warrants are entitled. It would seem that the bearer of a stock or share warrant must, before he is entitled to exercise any of the rights of a member in respect of the stock or shares comprised in his warrant, produce such warrant to the company (y). Frequently the articles provide that this deposit must be made a certain number of days before exercising any right, and also for the company giving a person who makes such deposit a voucher showing that his warrant has been deposited.

Usually share warrants have attached to them coupons entitling

Holders of share warrants to bearer intending to submit a claim for refund of income tax to the Inland Revenue Department should apply for a certificate when presenting their coupons.

STOCK.

A company limited by shares may, if so authorized by its articles, alter the conditions of its memorandum by converting all or any of its paid-up shares into stock, and may also reconvert that stock into paid-up shares of any denomination (d) ; if it does either of these things it must give notice to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies specifying the shares converted or the stock reconverted (e).

Where such a company has converted any of its shares into stock and given notice to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, all the provisions of the Act which apply to shares only cease to apply to such of the share capital as is converted into stock ; and the register of members of the company and the list of members to be forwarded to the Registrar must show the amount of stock held by each member instead of the amount of shares and the particulars relating to shares required by the Act (f).

(b) Or the interim dividend as the case may be. These coupons form part of the share warrant and are not, it is thought, apart from such share warrant negotiable instruments. See post, p. 467, note (i).

(c) Notices of meeting to share warrant holders given by advertisement should state the same matters as are stated on notices of meetings and also the date on or before which and the place where share warrants are to be deposited; the notice also usually states that the share warrants will be retained until after the meeting, a certificate being issued as prescribed by the articles in the meanwhile.

Where payment in full is made, stock can be issued without going through the formality of issuing shares—but the issue of bonus or partly paid stock is ultra vires—and it has been held that the holders of stock so issued are not members (ff).

The principal effect of turning shares into stock seems to be that, subject to the provisions of the articles, any amount, however small, of the stock may be transferred, for the whole stock issued forms one mass. Usually, however, the articles enable the directors to fix a minimum amount of stock transferable and to forbid transfers of fractions of that minimum (g); they also generally confer on the holders of stock the same rights as are conferred on holders of shares, but subject to a proviso that no right in relation to meetings shall be conferred by any such aliquot part of stock as would not if existing on shares have conferred that right (h). There is no reason why stock should not be converted into stock warrants (i), though Table A does not allow of this being done (k).

As stock may be reconverted into shares of any denomination it would appear desirable to provide that the reconverted shares shall confer only the same privileges as the stock from which they are reconverted, otherwise the result of such reconversion may be to confer on a share of very small or very large denomination the same voting rights as are conferred by other shares.

It follows from the nature of stock, that it can have no distinctive numbers and stock certificates will be on the same form as share certificates except that they will certify that the holder is the holder of £ stock in the capital of the company; usually, too where there is a minimum amount transferable, they will contain a note stating that the stock is only transferable on amounts of £ (i.e. the minimum) and multiples of that amount.

RIGHTS TO NEW SHARES ON AN INCREASE OF CAPITAL.

It is not unusual for the articles to provide that on an increase of capital and subject to any direction of a general meeting of the company, new shares must be offered to existing members—as nearly as possible in proportion to their holdings. Such articles often further states that the offer must be made by a notice specifying the number of shares to which each member is entitled and must limit a time within which shares if not accepted will be deemed to be declined, and that on the expiration of such notice or on a member stating that he does not desire the shares to which he is entitled the company may dispose of such shares as it sees fit (l). Under such clauses, subject to any provision to the contrary in the articles, the representatives of a deceased member are entitled to the shares to which the deceased would have been entitled (m). If shares are held by trustees any new shares to which they become entitled belong to the estate and if they are not in a position to take them the right to call for the new shares should, if valuable, be sold for the benefit of the estate (n). The notice is usually accompanied by a letter of renunciation, which must bear a sixpenny stamp (o), so as to enable the shares or rather the right to call for them to be sold. Where an owner of shares is under contract to sell such shares at the date when he becomes entitled to fresh shares in right of his holding, the purchaser will be entitled to such fresh shares and the vendor will hold them as trustee for him (p).

FORM OF OFFER OF SHARES TO EXISTING SHAREHOLDERS.

Dear Sir,

I am requested by the directors to offer you new shares of £ each on the capital of the Company. Should you desire to take these shares or any of them will you fill in and sign the application form sent herewith. Should you wish to renounce your rights to such shares or any of them will you fill in the enclosed letter of renunciation, and sign it over a sixpenny stamp and obtain the signature of the person in whose favour you renounce to the form appended to such letter of renunciation. If this offer is not accepted on or before the day of it will be deemed to be declined, and the directors will dispose of the shares offered.

RIGHTS OF DIFFERENT CLASSES OF SHARES.

Very frequently the shares of a company are divided into two or more different classes, conferring different rights.

For instance, there may be preference shares as we have seen conferring a preferential dividend, either with or without a right to a further dividend after a specified dividend has been paid on the other shares of the company (pp) and either with or without a right to repayment of capital on a winding-up in priority to other shares. In such last case the preference shares may or may not be entitled to participate in any assets of the company that may remain after all the shareholders have received a return of the capital they have paid up. Sometimes, too, there will be deferred or founders' shares, perhaps of small nominal value, conferring rights to a considerable proportion of the profits, after a certain dividend has been paid on the other shares of the company and also, in some cases, a right to a considerable share of the assets after the other shareholders have received back the capital they have paid up. Not infrequently the preference shares are given no voting rights, or only voting rights on certain specified matters, e.g. the question of a winding-up. Sometimes, too, the company cannot borrow, or cannot borrow beyond a certain amount without the consent of the preference shareholders. The statute provides that holders of preference shares of a company shall have the same right to receive and inspect the balance-sheets of the company and the reports of the auditors and other reports, as is possessed by the holders of ordinary shares in the company (q). The rights conferred on different classes of shares are not matters which the Act requires to be set out in the (pp) In Will v. United Lankat Plantations (1912), 56 Sol. J. 379, the resolution creating the preference shares and the articles were read together, with the result that such shares were held to be entitled to share in further dividends.

(q) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 114; this does not apply to a private company.

memorandum, and so are primâ facie matters for the articles (r). In such case the articles can, of course, be changed, but the power of changing the articles being one which must be exercised in the interests of the company as a whole, it would be difficult if not impossible to alter such rights so as to favour one existing class of members against another (s); it will, however, be otherwise where it is a question of bringing in fresh capital and getting people to take up unissued shares. For greater security the rights of preference shareholders are often set out in the memorandum; in such case they will form a condition of the memorandum (t) and so be unalterable (u) unless the memorandum itself provides, by reference to the Articles or otherwise (x), a mode by which they may be altered, in which case such provision will form part of the condition. Possibly also rights conferred by the memorandum may be altered if there is a power in the original Articles of Association, even though such power is not in any way incorporated in the memorandum. There is one Scotch case (y) which affirms the view that such rights can be so altered, and this view is supported by Table A, which, after providing that subject to the provisions of the memorandum shares may be issued with such privileges as may from time to time be determined (z), proceeds to provide that where the shares are divided the rights (including apparently those conferred by the memorandum) may be varied (a). As already stated, the rights given to different classes of shares are not by the Act required to be set out in the memorandum, and there is abundant authority to show that with regard to matters not by the Act required to be set out in the memorandum the original articles may be looked at for the purpose of construing the memorandum (b), on the principle that two contemporaneous documents must so far as possible be read together, and be reconciled the one with the other; indeed, in Anderson's Case (c), (c) (1877), 7 C. D. 75; see also Humboldt Redwood v. Coats, [1908] S. C. 751.

Jessel, M.R., and Baggallay, L.J., held that if there was a conflict in such matters there was no reason why the memorandum should prevail (cc). Further, the contract the shareholder enters into purports to be based on both the memorandum and articles, and the only possible ground for saying that such contract is invalid would be based on cases like Welton v. Saffery (d) and the fact that the Act says that the memorandum is to be unalterable ; but all these cases will be found to be cases where the company is doing by its articles something contrary to the policy of the Acts, and such a contract as is now under discussion can scarcely be said to be that, when a few words added to the memorandum so as to incorporate the article as to varying class rights would clearly make the contract valid (e).

All this is quite consistent with the view that rights conferred by the memorandum and which are not added to or affected by the original articles are unalterable.

Even such rights may, however, be altered now, for the Act (f) provides that—A company may by special resolution confirmed by an order of the Court (g) modify the conditions contained in its memorandum of association so as to reorganize its capital, whether by the consolidation of shares of different classes or by the division of its shares into shares of different classes ; but no preference or special privilege attached to or belonging to any class of shares shall be interfered with except by a resolution passed by a majority in number of shareholders of that class representing three-fourths of the capital of that class and confirmed in the same manner as a special resolution of the company is required to be confirmed, and every resolution so passed shall bind all shareholders of such class.

Where an order is made under this section an office copy thereof must be filed with the Registrar within seven days after the making of the order, or within such further time as the Court may allow, and the resolution shall not take effect until such a copy has been so filed.

The proviso in the section is very badly drafted, but it will be observed that it does not speak of the majority in number of the shareholders, but of a majority in number of shareholders, and it is thought that if a meeting of the shareholders be called the majority at that meeting will be sufficient, if there are there present in person or by proxy (h) and voting in favour of the scheme shareholders representing three-fourths of the capital of the class. At the confirmatory meeting a bare majority of the members of the class present in person or by proxy will be enough. The application to the Court should, it is thought, be by petition. Presumably where no shares of a particular class have been issued the shares of that class may be consolidated or subdivided by special resolution. Almost any scheme can, it is thought, be carried out by using both the consolidation and division branches of the section; thus 5 per cent. preference shares could be converted to 4 per cent. by first consolidating them with the ordinary shares and then dividing the ordinary shares into different classes (i).

R. 181, the memorandum conferred on certain shares "the rights specified in the articles" and the question was whether this meant the original articles or the articles for the time being.

Where on an increase of capital provision is made for the new shares having special rights, such rights will not be incorporated in the memorandum (ii).

To return to Articles conferring the power to change class rights—a power to modify or alter or change the rights seems to be sufficient—the power may be given either to a meeting of the class at which a particular quorum is present (k) or it may be exercised by one shareholder of the class entering into an agreement with the company, such agreement being operative only if ratified by a particular majority of the class; a third plan is to authorize a change if a particular majority of the class consent to it in writing. The two later methods seem, perhaps, better than the first, as being more simple. Sometimes the power may be exercised in more than one way (l).

(h) The word "representing" in the section seems to authorize proxies.

(i) The matter is dealt with further, infra, p. 721.

(k) For the construction of such an article, Hemans v. Hotchkiss Ordnance Co., [1899] 1 Ch. 115. Where all the shares of a particular class are in the hands of one person it would seem that the assent of that person alone will be sufficient as there cannot be a meeting and the articles must be taken to have contemplated such a state of affairs: East v. Bennett Bros., [1911] 1 Ch. 163.

CHAPTER VI.

Management and Administration of Companies.

Every company must have a registered office to which all communications and notices may be addressed, and notice of the situation of the registered office, and of any change therein, must be given to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, who must record the same.

A company carrying on business without complying with these requirements will be liable to a fine not exceeding £5 for every day during which it so carries on business (a).

Every limited company must:

(1) paint or affix, and keep painted or affixed, its name (aa) on the outside of every office or place in which its business is carried on, in a conspicuous position, in letters easily legible:

(2) have its name engraven in legible characters on its seal:

(3) have its name mentioned in legible characters in all notices, advertisements, and other official publications of the company, and in all bills of exchange, promissory notes, endorsements, cheques and orders for money or goods purporting to be signed by or on behalf of the company, and in all bills of parcels, invoices, receipts, and letters of credit of the company.

A limited company which does not paint or affix, and keep painted or affixed, its name in the manner directed by the Act, will be liable to a fine not exceeding £5 for not so painting or affixing its name, and for every day during which its name is not so kept painted or (a) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 62; the registered office must be in England, Scotland or Ireland, and the memorandum must state in which of such countries it is situate: ibid., ss. 3, 4, and 5. Notice of change of a registered office must be on Form 5 issued by Somerset House (cost, 2*d*.). Such notice should be signed by the manager or secretary of the company.

(aa) Abbreviations such as "Co." and "Ltd." may be used: F. Stacey & Co. v. Wallis (1912), 28 T. L. R. 209.

affixed, and every director and manager of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits the default will be liable to a similar penalty (b).

Any director, manager, or officer of a limited company or any person on its behalf who uses or authorizes the use of any seal purporting to be a seal of the company whereon its name is not so engraven, or issues or authorizes the issue of any notice, advertisement, or other official publication of the company or signs or authorizes to be signed on behalf of the company any bill of exchange, promissory note, endorsement, cheque, order for money or goods, or issues or authorizes to be issued any bill of parcels, invoice, receipt, or letter of credit of the company, wherein its name is not so mentioned, will be liable to a fine not exceeding £50, and he will also be personally liable to the holder of any such bill of exchange, promissory note, cheque, or order for money or goods, for the amount thereof, unless the same is duly paid by the company (c).

Not every company has the power to issue negotiable instruments; it is a question in each case of whether it is intended to have such a power, the intention in each case being ascertained from the construction of its memorandum and articles; but probably trading companies, in the strict sense of the term, would in all cases have implied power to so do, as the question of what is usual or the reverse in the ordinary course of business of the company, will have an important bearing on the question whether such a power is to be implied (d).

Where a company has power to issue negotiable instruments, bills of exchange or promissory notes will be deemed to have been made, accepted, or endorsed on its behalf if made in the name of or by or on behalf or on account of the company by any person acting under its authority (e).

It has been held under this section that a company will only be

(b) If a company omits to comply with the provisions of this section that will not preclude it from enforcing any rights (e.g. to a trade name) it has: H. G. Randall v. British and American Shoe Co., [1902] 2 Ch. 354; Pearks, Gunston and Tee v. Thompson, Talmey & Co. (1901), 18 Rep. Pat. Cas. 185.

(c) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 63. Section 12 of the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, provides that where any notice advertisement or other official publication of an assurance company contains a statement of the authorized capital of the company the statement must also contain a statement of the amount of the capital which has been subscribed and the amount paid up.

bound by a bill of exchange where the person signing had actual authority to do so. In this case the company had held out that the person who signed had authority, and the person who had taken the bill of exchange or promissory note had no knowledge of any defect in such authority and had given consideration for the bill (f). It is not thought that this decision can be law; it seems to ignore the section of the Act (g) which provides that the acts of a director (which includes any person occupying the position of a director by whatever name called) (h) shall be valid notwithstanding any defect that may afterwards be discovered in his appointment or qualification. Moreover, if this decision is good law it would seem to affect not only bills of exchange and promissory notes, but also contracts made in writing or by parol under section 76 of the Act (i).

If a person who signs had no authority to do so, the directors, if they could originally have given him such authority, may ratify the transaction so as to make it binding on the company (k).

Bills of exchange and promissory notes, if made, accepted, or indorsed on behalf of a company, need not state such fact on their face (l), but it must be possible to gather from the document that the persons signing intend that the company and not themselves shall be bound. It will not be enough that they are described as directors (m), even if the seal of the company is attached (n); but it will be enough if a promissory note takes the form, "I promise to pay for the" company (o), or "I promise to pay," and then at the bottom the name of the company is appended with the name of the managing director, describing him as such underneath (p), or "we jointly promise to pay on account of the" company, naming it (q).

though the company is itself liable; if the bill of exchange does not contain the proper name of the company, e.g. if the word "limited" is omitted (r), or if it is omitted in one place, and in the only other place where the name occurs, it is so turned round as to put other words after it (s), or if additions are made to the name where it occurs (t), but if in one place the name is correctly stated as the drawer of a bill and in another the word "limited" is omitted from the name where it appears as the name of the acceptor, the section will be complied with, and only the company will be liable (u).

Directors, moreover, will not be liable where the name of the company is only contained in the address, and the word "Limited" is there abbreviated into Ltd. (uu).

Persons accepting bills, etc., on behalf of or in the name of a company will, if they have no authority to do so, be personally liable (x).

Contracts on behalf of a company may be made as in the following ways, that is to say—

(1) Any contract which if made between private persons would be by law required to be in writing, and if made according to English law to be under seal, may be made on behalf of the company in writing under the common seal of the company, and may in the same manner be varied or discharged.

(2) Any contract which if made between private persons would be by law required to be in writing, signed by the parties to be charged therewith, may be made on behalf of the company in writing signed by any person acting under its authority, express or implied, and may in the same manner be varied or discharged;

(3) Any contract which if made between private persons would by law be valid although made by parol only, and not reduced into writing, may be made by parol on behalf of the company by any person acting under its authority, express or implied, and may in the same manner be varied or discharged.

All contracts made according to this section are effectual in law, and bind the company and its successors and all other parties thereto, their heirs, executors, or administrators, as the case may be. Any deed to which the company is a party will be held to be validly executed in Scotland on behalf of the company if it is executed in terms of the provisions of the Act or is sealed with the common seal of the company and subscribed on behalf of the company by two of the directors and the secretary of the company, and such subscription on behalf of the company will be equally binding whether attested by witnesses or not (y).

This section seems, so far as companies formed under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, or the Companies Act, 1862, are concerned, to do away with the old law that a company can only contract under its common seal; in the case of trading companies it had been established, even before the section, that they could validly enter into contracts in the ordinary course of their business without using their seal (z).

It is very usual to provide by the articles that the seal of the company shall only be affixed in the presence of one or more, usually two, directors and the secretary or some other person authorized in that behalf by the directors, and that every document to which the seal is affixed shall be signed by such persons. Such provisions are very useful, for though apart from them, if the seal were fixed by some entirely unauthorized person it would not, except perhaps in very exceptional circumstances, bind the company (a), the company probably would be bound, if the person who affixed the seal had apparent authority to do so, and there were no such provisions in the articles.

Under the second part of the section the signature of a chairman of a meeting of directors to minutes containing sufficient particulars to satisfy the Statute of Frauds has been held to be sufficient to satisfy the requirements of that statute (b).

A company may, by writing under its common seal, empower any person, either generally or in respect of any specified matters, as its attorney to execute deeds on its behalf in any place not situate in the United Kingdom; and every deed signed by such attorney on behalf of the company and under his seal binds the company, and has the same effect as if it were under its common seal (c). Further, a company whose objects require or comprise the transaction of business in foreign countries may, if authorized by its articles, have for use in any territory, district, or place not situate in the United Kingdom an official seal which must be a facsimile of the common seal of the company with the addition on its face of the name of every territory, district, or place where it is to be used. Any company which has such an official seal may by writing under its common seal authorize any person appointed for the purpose in any territory, district, or place not situate in the United Kingdom to affix the same to any deed or other document to which the company is party in such territory, district, or place. The authority of any such agent continues as between the company and any person dealing with the agent, during the period, if any, mentioned in the instrument conferring the authority, or if no period is there mentioned, then until notice of the revocation or determination of the agent's authority has been given to the person dealing with him.

The person affixing any such official seal must, by writing under his hand, on the deed or other document to which the seal is affixed, certify the date and place of affixing the same.

A deed or other document to which an official seal is duly affixed binds the company as if it had been sealed with the common seal of the company (d).

A document may be served on a company by leaving it at or sending it by post to the registered office of the company (e). The expression document in the Act includes summons, notice, order, and other legal process (f).

A document or proceeding requiring authentication by a company may be signed by a director, secretary, or other authorized officer of the company, and need not be under its common seal (g).

All offences under the Act made punishable by any fine may be prosecuted under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts (h).

The Court imposing any fine under the Act may direct that the whole or any part thereof be applied in or towards payment of the costs of the proceedings, or in or towards the rewarding the person on whose information or at whose suit the fine is recovered, and subject to any such direction all fines under the Act must, notwithstanding anything in any other Act, be paid into the Exchequer (i).

other legal proceeding, any Judge having jurisdiction in the matter may, if it appears by credible testimony that there is reason to believe that the company will be unable to pay the costs of the defendant if successful in his defence, require sufficient security to be given for those costs, and may stay all proceedings until the security is given (k). The section does not apply to misfeasance proceedings by a liquidator (l). The fact that a company is in liquidation, even voluntary liquidation with a view to an amalgamation (m), would appear to raise a sufficient primâ facie case for ordering security (n). The section would seem to apply to actions in the nature of cross actions (o), at all events where they are not simply defences to the original actions (p), and it applies to counterclaims (q), and, it would seem, appeals by the company (r), but not to appeals against orders in favour of the company (s). In deciding the amount of security to be given the Court will estimate the probable cost of the action, having regard, amongst other considerations, to the fact that the action may collapse (t), and the Court can order security to be given up to a certain stage of the action with liberty to renew the application (x). The fact that a step in the action has been taken will not be a bar to obtaining security for costs (y), especially where the company has so amended its statement of claim as to alter the nature of the action (z).

The section has no application to unlimited companies (a).

Where a company is in winding-up, the fact that the assets will be sufficient to pay the costs is no answer to an application for security for costs (b). The Scotch practice under the section was discussed in Brownrigg Coal Co. (c), and it is thought that the principles laid down in this case hold to a certain extent also in England (c).

In the case of a company subject to the stannaries jurisdiction, the Court exercising the stannaries jurisdiction (d) has and can exercise the same jurisdiction and powers, as well on the common law as on the equity side thereof, as the Court of the Vice-Warden of the stannaries possessed before the commencement of the Stannaries Court (Abolition) Act, 1896, by custom, usage, or statute in the case of unincorporated companies, but only so far as is consistent with the provisions of the Companies (Consolidation) Act and with the constitution of companies as prescribed or required by that Act.

For the purpose of giving fuller effect to such jurisdiction all process issuing out of such Court, and all orders, rules, demands, notices, warrants, and summonses required or authorized by the practice of the Court to be served on any company, whether registered or not registered or on any member or contributory thereof, or on any officer, agent, director, manager, or servant thereof, may be served in any part of England without any special order of the Judge for that purpose, or by such special order may be served in any part of the British Islands, on such terms and conditions as the Court may think fit; but no such service of process out of the limits of the stannaries in any suit or plaint on the common law side of the Court may be effected without the special order of the Judge made on a statement of the nature and object of the suit or plaint.

All decrees, orders, and judgments of such Court may be enforced in the same manner in which decrees, orders, and judgments of the Court of the Vice-Warden of the stannaries could before its abolition have been by law enforced, whether within or beyond the stannaries (e).

Companies parties to the arbitration may delegate to the arbitrator power to settle any terms or to determine any matter capable of being lawfully settled or determined by the companies themselves, or by their directors or other managing body; and all the provisions of the Railway Companies Arbitration Act, 1859, will apply to arbitrations between companies and persons in pursuance of the Act. The words "the companies" in the section of the Railway Companies Arbitration Act include companies under the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (f).

COMMENCEMENT OF BUSINESS.

No company except a private company (g) may commence a business or exercise any borrowing powers unless—

(a) Shares held subject to the payment of the whole amount thereof in cash have been allotted to an amount not less in the whole than the minimum subscription; and

(b) Every director of the company has paid to the company on each of the shares taken or contracted to be taken by him, and for which he is liable to pay in cash, a proportion equal to the proportion payable on application and allotment on the shares offered for public subscription, or in the case of a company which does not offer shares for public subscription on the shares payable in cash; and

(c) There has been filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies a statutory declaration by the secretary or one of the directors, in the prescribed form, that the aforesaid conditions have been complied with; and

(d) In the case of a company which does not issue a prospectus, there has been filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies a statement in lieu of prospectus.

The Registrar of Joint Stock Companies must, on the filing of this statutory declaration, certify that the company is entitled to commence business, and that certificate is conclusive evidence that the company is so entitled.

In the case of a company which does not issue a prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for its shares the Registrar may not give such a certificate unless in addition a statement in lieu of prospectus has been filed with him.

Any contract made by a company before the date at which it is entitled to commence business is provisional only, and is not binding on the company until that date, but on that date it becomes binding.

(f) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 119.

(g) The section in addition does not apply to companies registered before January 1, 1901, or to any company registered before July 1, 1908, which does not issue a prospectus inviting the public to subscribe for its shares.

The section does not prevent the simultaneous offer for subscription or allotment of any shares and debentures or the receipt of any money payable on application for debentures.

If any company commences business or exercises borrowing powers in contravention of this section, every person who is responsible for the contravention will without prejudice to any other liability, be liable to a fine (h) not exceeding £50 for every day during which the contravention continues (i).

If a company fails to obtain a certificate entitling it to commence business, all contracts made by it are simply void; it cannot sue or be sued on any contract even if it has actually supplied or been supplied with goods (k), and a bank with whom it has deposited moneys received by it will have no lien on such moneys and no right of action in respect of moneys which if the company had obtained its certificate would have been owing for work and labour done by the bank or for commission on shares applied for (l). A company cannot previously to its statutory meeting alter the terms of a contract referred to in a prospectus or statement in lieu of a prospectus except subject to the approval of the statutory meeting (m).

A Commissioner for Oaths.

DIRECTORS.

Owing to the size of most companies, it is impracticable for the business to be carried on by the shareholders, and consequently the duty of managing the affairs of the company is delegated to a select governing body consisting of persons usually called directors. The appointment of these persons, the time during which they are to serve, the qualification shares they are to hold, the powers conferred on them, and the remuneration they are to receive are matters, for the most part, decided by the articles of association ; but the Act (p) and also the general law has also something to say in the matter.

(p) In the Act the expression "director" unless the context otherwise requires includes any person occupying the position of director by whatever name called: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 285. A person having the powers ordinarily conferred on a director will, whatever he be called, be in the same position as a director: Bulawayo Market and Offices, [1907] 2 Ch. 458.

The number of directors is usually fixed within certain limits by the articles. The articles also usually either name the persons who are to be first directors, or leave it to the subscribers to the Memorandum of Association to do so, and sometimes the subscribers to the memorandum are themselves given the powers of directors until regular directors have been appointed. Where the subscribers to the memorandum all agree in the appointment of the directors, they need not meet to make the appointment (q); in other cases, if all have been summoned to a meeting a majority (r), but not a minority (s) of the whole number of subscribers can make the appointment. The power cannot be exercised before the company is incorporated (t), but it continues until directors are validly appointed (u). One company may be appointed the sole director of another company (x), and a director need not necessarily have special knowledge of the business the company is to carry on (y). Directors have been variously likened to trustees, agents, and managing partners. Their exact position is, however, probably not the same as any one of the three.

It is founded on contract, and so in bankruptcy where a director, who is also a partner in a firm which acts as agent for the company, has as a member of such firm misappropriated assets of the company, a double proof will be allowed (z).

Directors are not in any sense trustees for individual shareholders, and so there is nothing to prevent them from buying the shares of a member even when they, in their character of directors, know of negotiations which are likely to enhance the value of such shares (a); they are also not trustees for the creditors of the company (b), even in cases where the company itself stands in a fiduciary relationship towards a creditor (c).

They are trustees of the company's money and property (d), but not of debts due to the company (e).

Even with regard to the company's money and property, their position is very different from that of ordinary trustees. In the first place, to quote a well-known passage from the judgment of James, L.J., in Smith v. Anderson (f), "A trustee is a man who is the owner of the property, and deals with it as principal as owner and master, subject only to an equitable obligation to account to some persons to whom he stands in relation of trustee and who are his cestuis que trust. The same individual may fill the office of director and also be a trustee having property, but that is a rare exceptional and casual circumstance. The office of director is that of a paid servant of the company. A director never enters into contract for himself, but he enters into contracts for his principal, that is, for the company of whom he is a director and for whom he is acting. He cannot sue on such contracts, nor be sued on them, unless he exceeds his authority." Moreover, his position as regards liability is very different from that of a trustee; thus, except, perhaps, in the most exceptional circumstances, a director who does nothing and simply stays away from the board-room, will not be liable for wrongful acts of his co-directors (g). Moreover, where there has been no dishonesty, a director will not, if acting within his authority, be liable for errors of judgment, however great, unless he has been guilty of gross negligence (h); or, to put the matter in other words, his duty is to exercise the ordinary diligence which men of common prudence generally exercise about their own affairs (i), and he will not be liable unless he commits a breach of such duty.

In such cases the question is not what the judge thinks prudent or the reverse, but what an ordinary business man would do in his own business; Overend, Gurney & Co. v. Gurney (1869), 4 Ch. 701, affirmed, sub nom. Overend, Gurney & Co. v. Gibb (1872), L. The articles may protect a director against negligence of any sort, and in such case a director who acts honestly will apparently have absolute protection (k). Where directors have acted beyond their authority owing to acting on statements or advice given to them, and they have not been guilty of gross negligence in so doing, there also they will not be liable (l).

But where directors have acted beyond their authority, and at the time of so acting have had full knowledge of the relevant facts (m), they will be liable, and they will be equally liable where they would have had full knowledge of the relevant facts had they not unduly relied on statements made to them by their subordinates (n). Thus directors who have paid dividends out of capital have been held liable for so doing, not only where they knew the balance-sheets prepared were wrong (o), but also where they have never caused any proper balance-sheet or profit and loss account to be prepared (p), where there never has been any profit and they have simply been paying interest on the paid-up capital of the company (q), where they have applied moneys devoted to a special purpose to general purposes (r), and where they have knowingly paid dividends in a manner not authorized by the constitution of the company (s). On the other hand, directors have escaped liability where they have paid dividends out of profits which they bonâ fide estimated that the company had made (t), and where they have properly relied on a statement of facts which turned out to be untrue, but which, if true, would have justified the dividends declared (u). The test whether they have or have not properly relied on a statement, being whether they have been guilty of gross negligence in so doing. conferred on them are to be found in the cases where they have purchased the company's own shares with the money of the company (x), and where they have issued shares at a discount (y) or paid underwriting commissions (z), or have appointed and paid a managing director, although not authorized to do so (a).

It follows from the fiduciary nature of the office of a director, that no director may make any profit out of his office unless such profit is expressly sanctioned by the company at large, or is authorized by the constitution of the company (b). Any director who infringes this principle or allows a co-director to do so will have to account to the company for the profit, and no director may take or concur in giving to a co-director any bribe for any act done by him as a director (c).

These principles have frequently been illustrated by the case where directors have received gifts of the shares required to qualify him as director.

Thus directors who have received presents of shares from promoters under an agreement entered into before the contract of sale to the company was entered into (d), or after the contract has been made, but while questions arising out of it are still open (e), has been held to be bound to account to the company for the highest value the shares have had since the date of their allotment, with interest at the rate of 5 per cent. from the date of such allotment till repayment (f); and in one case a person who was not a director till after the contract was completed was held accountable for the shares he received as a gift (g). In another case (h) a promoter agreed that he would take a director's qualification shares off him at their par value when the latter resigned and the director's shares were in pursuance of the agreement purchased from him, it was held that he was accountable to the company for the money he had received; a fictitious arrangement by which directors are given an interest in the property immediately before the sale to the company will not save them from being accountable for any part of the proceeds of sale which they subsequently receive (i). And a director will be liable to pay for the amount of his qualification shares where he holds them as trustee for a promoter and can be removed by that promoter at any time (k).

It has even been held that an article authorizing promoters to give shares to directors of the company will not protect directors of the company who have received or allowed their co-directors to receive shares (l).

Where, however, there has been a full disclosure to the company as a whole (m) of the fact that the directors are receiving presents of their qualification shares, there it would appear that the directors will not be accountable (n).

In the cases we have been considering the directors will not be liable to be placed on the list of contributories (o), but it will be otherwise where they have not received the shares from the promoters, but have at his direction received the money to pay for their shares directly from the company out of the money due to the promoter; in such cases the company will be able to follow the money, which is treated as wrongfully added to the purchase price and as having been its own from the beginning, in the same way as they could follow trust money which had been misapplied, and will consequently be able to treat the shares allotted to the directors as having been taken but not paid for (p). Presents of cash from the promoters of a company will, however, be on a different footing; if these are paid out of the company's own moneys the company can no doubt usually recover them, but it cannot treat shares paid up out of such moneys as unpaid (q).

Directors who have sanctioned this class of transaction will be jointly and severally liable to recoup the company (r).

Directors will be liable to make good to the company profits which they have made when acting on its behalf, even though their company could not have made the profit itself, e.g. profits a director has earned in his character of member of another company for bringing business to such other company (s); and they will have to make good to the company profits which they have made when trading in perfect honesty with the company (t). It is not unusual for the articles of a company to provide that the office of a director shall be vacated if he deals with the company without disclosing his interest; in such case a director will have to disclose the exact nature of his interest (u), that is, in all cases the duty of an agent making a profit at the expense of his principal (x). to deal with his company and keep any profits he makes out of his dealings (y). Further, if the article goes on to say that it is not to apply where the interest is only as a member of a company, it will be enough for the director concerned to disclose that he is a member of such other company (z).

Where directors are selling their own property to a company, it is their duty to disclose the exact nature of their interest in the property (a). If they fail to disclose that they have an interest, this will be tantamount to saying that they have no interest, and will therefore amount to fraud (b); and in such case the company can at its option rescind the contract (so long as it can restore the thing bought) or sue the director for damages in an action of deceit (c). Where, however, the director has disclosed he has an interest without disclosing its exact nature, the former remedy alone would appear to be open to the company (d). Directors cannot appoint one of their number to any office of profit under the company and pay him for acting in such office (e), nor, at all events where they are paid, can they pay their travelling expenses out of the company's assets (f) or arrange that their salaries shall be paid free of income tax (g); but if a company holds shares in another company and arranges for one of its directors to be a director of such other company and provides him with his qualification shares, in such case the director will be entitled to retain any remuneration he is paid for acting as director of the second company (h), such remuneration being paid in respect of his services (h) and not in respect of his shares.

N. 165.

A director who buys up at a discount debentures which have to his knowledge been improperly issued will not be allowed to make a profit out of the transaction (i). A company cannot, even where all its members assent, make a present to its directors, if there are no funds available for distribution among the members as dividends (k) though a company has power without a special provision in its memorandum or articles to give gratuities to employees, and if there is a power which allows it to do so (l), can make presents out of funds available for dividends to directors. Such powers will, it would seem, cease where the company has gone into winding-up, for such powers are based not on the fact that a company can indulge in indiscriminate charity, but that it can make presents where the result of such presents is likely to be that it will be better served in the future (m).

Whether the case of Normandy v. Ind, Coope & Co. (n) is good law is a difficult question; there the directors had been overpaying themselves all round, and they sought to alter the articles so as to grant an annuity to one of their number and generally to benefit themselves. The Judge held, somewhat strangely, that these transactions were not ultra vires the company, and that the company and the company alone could complain of them. It might well have been held that even if they were not ultra vires they were in their nature fraudulent and consequently that a minority of shareholders could complain of them. In cases where there has been no fraud or wrong-doing, but simply acts done in excess of authority, directors will simply have to account for the difference between what they gave for the property they acquired and what they would have given had there been no such breach of authority (o). In other cases they will have to account for the highest value of the thing acquired with interest at 5 per cent. (p), and as the interest is in the nature of damages income tax cannot be deducted from it (q).

(m) Hutton v. West Cork Railway (1883), 23 C. D. 654; Stroud v. Royal Aquarium (1903), 89 L. T. 243. These cases are not easy to reconcile with Kaye v. Croydon Tramways, [1898] 1 Ch. 358; and Southall v. British Mutual (1871), 6 Ch. 614; probably the explanation of the latter two cases is that it was held that the benefit the directors were to get was really given at the expense of the purchasing and not of the selling company of which they were directors: see also Tiessen v. Henderson, [1899] 1 Ch. 861.

(n) [1908] 1 Ch. 84. On the question of ultra vires, this decision seems very difficult to reconcile with George Newman & Co., [1895] 1 Ch. 674, which was a decision of the Court of Appeal, nor does the principle on which presents can be made to employees seem to apply to directors who are managing partners. Moreover, even if the memorandum or articles could validly give a power to make presents to directors where there were no funds available for dividends surely the fact that the articles expressly provided for the directors' remuneration would negative there being any implied power to make them presents in addition.

Where the directors have done an act which is altogether ultra vires the company shareholders who have with full knowledge participated in and taken the benefit of the act will not be able to take proceedings to make the directors liable for such act, even on offering to make good to the company any profit they have individually made out of it (r) ; and if the directors are rendered liable, such shareholders will have to indemnify them against their liability (s). It is otherwise, however, where shareholders have inadvertently benefited by such an act (t).

It was said in Pickering v. Stephenson (u) that the Court had a discretion as to whether it would require directors to make good to the company any loss it had sustained by reason of an ultra vires act in which they had participated, but this case has been doubted (x), and perhaps the true explanation of it lies in the fact that it was not a case of an incorporated company (y). At the same time, where an application is made in a winding-up under section 215 of the Act the Court would seem to have a discretion (z).

Now, however, if in any proceeding against a director or person occupying the position of a director of a company for negligence or breach of trust it appears to the Court hearing the case that the director or person is or may be liable in respect of the negligence or breach of trust, but has acted honestly and reasonably, and ought fairly to be excused for the negligence or breach of trust, the Court may relieve him, either wholly or partly, from his liability on such terms as the Court may think proper (a).

These words follow, more or less closely, the words of section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, relating to trustees. Under that section the difficulty is usually to show that the trustees have acted reasonably. Possibly, however, where it is a question of excess of authority, this difficulty will not be so acute in the case of directors. It is probably not necessary to plead the section, but where there are pleadings it will be advisable to do so (b). Before the Trustee Act, 1888, directors could plead the Statute of Limitations where it was a question of having received a bribe, and there was no question of the company following the money, as it had not been paid out of its assets (c), and it would seem that even where they could not themselves plead the Statute of Limitations a manager and secretary who had misled them into doing the wrongful acts complained of could do so (d). Now, under the Trustee Act, 1888, directors, like other persons who are trustees, can plead the Statute of Limitations, where there is no question of fraud (e) ; and it would also seem that no action will apart from fraud lie against a director of a company after the winding-up of such company is completed and the company is dissolved (f).

Sometimes, even before the Trustee Act, 1888, although there was no Statute of Limitations applicable, the company or its liquidator was not allowed to set up a stale demand against directors who were alleged to have failed in their duties (g) ; but this probably only applied in complicated cases, where the directors were likely to find more difficulty in their defence by reason of their accusers having held their hand (h).

Where directors have been guilty of misfeasance, which they have subsequently made good, they are liable to be ordered to pay the costs of proceedings taken with reference to their misfeasance (i).

Directors are also trustees of the powers conferred on them. This does not mean that in the absence of express powers they are tied down by the same rules as ordinary trustees; thus directors with a power of lending money on mortgage are not necessarily tied down to lending money on first mortgages only (k), and directors with power to invest moneys need not necessarily invest in trust securities (l). What it does mean is that they may not use such powers so as to give themselves an advantage at the expense of their principal, the company. Parker v. McKenna (m) is the leading case on this subject; there, on an issue of new shares of a company, it was arranged that such shares as were not applied for by the existing members of the company at a premium of £25 per share were to be taken up by a third party at a premium of £30 per share, and it was arranged that he should make certain payments at certain times and should give certain guarantees. Subsequently, as the third party was unable to take up all the shares, some of the directors took up some of the shares he had agreed to take before they had been allotted to him, and they also relaxed the conditions as to guarantee and payments. They subsequently sold their shares at a profit, and for this they were held to be accountable to the company. There is, however, of course no rule of law preventing directors allotting shares to themselves at a fair price, whether such shares are preference, ordinary, or founders' shares (n).

Directors are similarly trustees of their powers of making calls, and they cannot therefore without incurring liability postpone a call so as to enable one of their own number to transfer his shares (o), or, in spite of an article authorizing different amounts being called up on different shares, give their own shares a preference in the matter of the calls that are made (p). They cannot expedite a meeting so as to prevent persons who have only recently become members from having votes (q), and they cannot make an issue of fresh shares with a view of thereby securing a majority in the company (r). They are also trustees of their powers of sanctioning transfers (s), but they are at full liberty to transfer their shares (t), except, perhaps, their qualification shares (u), and to vote at general meetings in respect of their shares (x) as freely as other members, for these are rights which they have in their characters of members, and not in their characters of directors. Further, a director who knowingly allots shares to an infant will be liable (y), and directors cannot make use of a power to delegate powers to a committee so as to exclude one of their number from acting as a director (z). But directors may in a bonâ fide case put their views before the members, and even spend the moneys of the company in sending out stamped proxies filled up with the name of the person who is to hold the proxy (a).

Where the company is asked to sanction any act of its directors on the ground that they are precluded by reason of their personal interest from effectively carrying it out, the directors are bound to give the members notice clearly showing what their interest is (b), except, perhaps, where it is simply a case of a contract in the ordinary course of the company's business, or in which the directors are only indirectly interested, e.g. as shareholders in another company (c). The question that remains to be considered is what is sufficient to make directors liable for the wrongs done by their co-directors. As has already been stated, probably a person who simply takes no part in the affairs of a company will not thereby render himself liable as a director (d). The only case which can be cited to the contrary, if one excepts the very old case of Charitable Corporation v.

Sutton (e), is Municipal Freehold Land Co. v. Pollington (f), and it may be doubted whether that is very good law on this point.

Further, merely being party to a resolution which proposes to misapply the assets of the company in the future will not, if it cannot be construed into a direction to pay away the assets, be sufficient (g), for if it must be shown that the director whom it is sought to make liable has been a party to some act which may be said to be the causa causans of the loss the company has suffered (h).

But the director will be liable if he has been a party to a resolution which has directed the misapplication of the company's assets, always supposing he has full knowledge of the material facts (i), or if with full knowledge of such facts he has signed a cheque for wrongfully paying away the company's moneys (k), or if he has signed a cheque without any inquiry and the company has suffered loss thereby (l), unless, indeed, he has paid it by the direction of some committee or person to whom the directors have properly left the question of certain expenditure, and is not aware of the fact that they propose to misapply the money (m).

It would seem, however, that a director will not be liable for a resolution of the Board to which he has not been a party merely because he signs the minutes at the succeeding meeting (n), though it may be otherwise if he makes a speech to the shareholders in which he represents himself as having been a party to or having considered and approved of the previous resolution (o). Directors who have been parties to the misapplication of the company's moneys may, at all events where there has been no fraud, recover contribution from one another (p), and the personal representatives of a deceased director will, to the extent that they have assets, be liable to contribute (q). Directors will not be fixed with notice of the contents of the company's books (r).

In a limited company the liability of the directors or managers, or of the managing director, may, if so provided by the memorandum, be unlimited.

In a limited company in which the liability of a director or manager is unlimited, the directors or managers of the company (if any) and the member who proposes a person for election or appointment to the office of director or manager must add to that proposal a statement that the liability of the person holding that office will be unlimited, and the promoters, directors, managers, and secretary (if any) of the company, or one of them, must, before the person accepts the office or acts therein, give him notice in writing that his liability will be unlimited.

If any director, manager, or proposer makes default in adding such a statement, or if any promoter, director, manager, or secretary makes default in giving such a notice, he will be liable to a fine not exceeding £100, and will also be liable for any damage which the person so elected or appointed may sustain from the default, but the liability of the person elected or appointed will not be affected by the default (s).

A limited company, if so authorized by its articles, may, by special resolution, alter its memorandum so as to render unlimited the liability of its directors, or managers, or of any managing director.

Upon the confirmation of any such special resolution the provisions of the special resolution will be as valid as if they had been originally contained in the memorandum; and a copy thereof must be embodied in or annexed to every copy of the memorandum issued after the confirmation of the resolution.

If a company makes default in complying with these requirements, it will be liable to a fine not exceeding £1 for every copy in respect of which default is made, and every director or manager of the company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits the default will be liable to a similar penalty (t).

(i) Signed and filed with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies a consent in writing to act as such director ; and

(ii) Either signed the memorandum of association for a number of shares not less than his qualification (if any), or signed and filed with the Registrar a contract in writing (x) to take from the company and pay (y) for his qualification shares (if any).

On the application for registration of the memorandum and articles of a company the applicant must deliver to the Registrar a list of the persons who have consented to be directors of the company (z), and if this list contains the name of any person who has not so consented, the applicant will be liable to a fine not exceeding £50.

This section does not apply to a prospectus issued by or on behalf of a company after the expiration of one year from the date at which the company is entitled to commence business (a).

Without prejudice to the restrictions imposed by these provisions, it is the duty of every director who is by the regulations of the company required to hold a specified share qualification, and who is not already qualified, to obtain his qualification within two months after his appointment, or such shorter time as may be fixed by the regulations of the company.

The office of director of a company will be vacated if the director does not within two months from the date of his appointment, or within such shorter time as may be fixed by the regulations of the company, obtain his qualification, or if after the expiration of such period or shorter time he ceases at any time to hold his qualification ;

Every company must keep at its registered office a register containing the names and the addresses and occupations of its directors or managers, and must send to the registrar of joint stock companies a copy thereof, and from time to time notify him of any change among its directors or managers (c). Such list should be on Form g (d), issued by Somerset House (cost 2*d*.). The form should be signed by the manager or secretary of the company. A 5*s*. registration fee stamp must be impressed.

Section 72 (3) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, provides that :—

"This section shall not apply to a private Company nor to a prospectus issued by or on behalf of a Company after the expiration of one year from the date at which the Company is entitled to commence business."

If the qualification is increased while a person is serving his term as director, he will not vacate his office or incur the penalty imposed by section 73 if he fails to increase his holding of shares so as to obtain the increased qualification (f).

Where, as is usual, the articles require a director to hold qualification shares, much difficulty has arisen as to how far a person who acts as director without acquiring his qualification becomes a member. The articles themselves do not constitute a contract between the director and the company (g), but they give the company power to employ directors on certain terms, and a person who acts as director will, at all events in the absence of evidence to the contrary, be taken to have agreed to act on those terms and no other terms (h).

(f) Molineaux v. London, Birmingham Insurance Co., [1902] 2 K. B. 589.

(h) Salton v. New Beeston, [1899] 1 Ch. 775 ; Swabey v. Port Darwin (1889), 1 Meg. 385.

There remains the difficulty that the articles usually do not require the director to take his shares from the company; it will be enough if he acquires them in some other way, e.g. by purchasing them in the market (i).

Putting aside the cases which have been decided under special Acts of Parliament (k), the cases on this point seem to group themselves under five headings.

(1) There are the cases where the articles are held not to apply to the directors in question at all, e.g. where such directors are original directors, and the articles in question only apply to future directors. Lord Claude Hamilton's Case (l), Stock's Case (m), and Forbes' Case (n) are examples of this class of case. In such cases there can be no question of liability.

(2) There are the cases where the holding of a certain number of shares is a condition precedent to a person becoming a director. In such cases if a person is elected who does not hold the requisite shares, he will not be liable as a member, for he never becomes a director (o); and the fact that his name is entered on the company's register of members will make no difference (p).

(3) There are the cases where the articles simply provide that directors must hold a certain number of qualification shares. In such cases a director no doubt owes a duty to the company to acquire his qualification shares, and impliedly authorizes the company to enter his name in the register in respect of such shares (q); but if nothing beyond the fact of his accepting the office of a director or accepting such office and acting in it, takes place, there will be no liability (r). There are one or two cases which seem to form exceptions to this rule. First of all, there is Stephenson's Case (s). It is stated in Buckley (t) that this case must be wrongly reported; it is certainly quite incomprehensible. Then comes Currie's Case (u). In that case subscribers to the memorandum who had failed to appoint directors, which they were entitled, and, it was held, were bound to do under the articles, were held liable. In this case the subscribers had signed an agreement binding them to take the shares, though this agreement was entered into before the incorporation of the company. Sir George Jessel (x) explains the case on this ground, but it is not an easy case to understand, and would very probably not be followed. Purcell's Case (y) has been explained (z) on the ground that there was a contract by letter to take and allot the shares. On the other hand, where there is an application for shares and the company has failed to allot them (a) and has not notified the director that his application is acceded to (b), there will be no contract. Directors have also been held liable where there has been an allotment by a share committee, but no entry in the register (c), and also where there has been only an entry in the ledger (d). Green's Case (e) and Austin's Case (f) seem to be cases where it was held that the persons sought to be made liable were not in fact directors, and in Shaw's Case (g) a person who was not validly appointed a director was held not liable for shares he had applied for to qualify him.

(4) Where there is a similar article to that in the foregoing class of cases, but the company have after the lapse of a reasonable time exercised their right to put a director on the register, there the director will practically always be liable. The rule will hold even where the directors have authorized an entry in the register, which has been made prior to the resignation of the director, after his resignation (h); it will also hold where the director himself subsequently to registration acquired sufficient shares (i). Where directors are allowed to act for a certain specified period before acquiring their qualification shares, such period will be the measure of what is a reasonable time (k), though possibly the director will not be liable if he only intends to act and does not act after the period expires (l). In other cases a reasonable time will be held to have elapsed when the director does any important act as a director (m). Thus attending a board meeting was in one case held to be sufficient (n), but apparently acts done while a company is merely in an inchoate condition, e.g. before it has gone to allotment, will not be sufficient to entitle the board to put a director's name on the register (o). But even where a reasonable time has elapsed, if the director resigns before his name is on the register, and the company sends him an application form for his qualification shares, which he returns unsigned, he will not be a contributory if his name is subsequently placed on the register (p). In one case where a person had applied for shares of a certain class in the mistaken belief that they would qualify him, he was held liable not only for such shares, but also for his qualification shares, his name being on the register for both (q). Merely being on the register will not make a director a member where he has not applied for shares and there is no question of qualification shares (r).

(5) Where there is an article providing that if directors do not obtain their qualification shares within a certain time they shall be deemed to have agreed to take the shares from the company (rr), there persons who have accepted a directorship will be liable (s), even though they have not acted (t), unless perhaps if they have resigned before the prescribed period has elapsed (u). But they will not be contributories if they have applied within the period and the directors have refused to allot, or if before the end of the period the company, though not in actual winding-up, has ceased to have an active existence (x).

It would seem that directors who have been placed on the register as the holders of fully paid shares cannot be treated as holders of unpaid shares even though they have not paid for the shares themselves (y), except in cases where the shares have in fact not been paid for at all and the directors in question are aware of the fact (z). In such cases, however, the directors may and will often be liable to pay the company the true value of the shares on the footing that they have committed a breach of trust in accepting a present of their qualification shares (a); but directors will not be liable in any sort of misfeasance proceedings for not taking their qualification shares (b).

The articles not infrequently provide that a director must hold his qualification shares in his own right. This does not mean that he must necessarily be beneficially entitled to them (c), but it does mean that he must hold them in such a way that the company can safely deal with him in respect of them, and a director will not for this purpose hold shares in his own right if he is a bankrupt and the company has notice of the fact (d), or if he is entered on the register of the company as holding the shares as liquidator (e). Sometimes the articles contain a provision that the shares of directors or other officers of a company, shall on their ceasing to hold their office, be forfeited or surrendered to the company. Such a provision is, in the case of a limited company, quite bad—and directors who have taken shares will be liable to be put on the list of contributories (f). Shares held by a director jointly with others will satisfy a qualification clause at all events where it does not require the director to hold the shares in his own right (g).

(g) Dunster's Case, [1894] 3 Ch. 473; Grundy v. Briggs, [1910] 1 Ch. 444.

The articles also provide for the period during which directors are to hold office and for the election of fresh directors—sometimes also they contain provisions for removing directors before the expiration of their term (gg)—if there is no such provision, the company cannot remove a director, unless it first alters its articles so as to take power to do so, and then after the confirmatory resolution for the alteration has been passed, it may remove a director in the manner prescribed by its altered articles (h). It has, however, been held that, though a company cannot remove a director, the court will not compel it to employ a director against the wish of the majority of its members (i). These cases depend on the principle that the court will not give specific performance of a contract of service. They are, however, both cases of orders made upon interlocutory motions, where of course the object would have been rather to keep matters in statu quo, than to finally decide the rights of the parties, and Harben v. Phillips (k) is, to say the least of it, difficult to reconcile with the recent decision of the Court of Appeal and House of Lords in Salmon v. Quin and Axtens (l), which decides that the company cannot deprive directors of the powers conferred on them by its articles of association unless it changes its articles—because their position is that of managing partners and not that of mere agents of the company. This case goes further than its predecessors (m), because the court interposed to protect the rights of the directors, in effect giving them specific performance of a contract which was only to be found in the articles.

It has also been held (n) that a director cannot, even where directors have very wide powers, retire without tendering his resignation to the company as a whole—though it seems to have been admitted that the company could not refuse to accept the resignation. The result of Salmon v. Quin and Axtens (o) is, it is submitted, that a company cannot refuse to employ its directors or any of them. The question remains, Do these remarks apply to the office of a managing director? There seems to be no doubt that a man may cease to be managing director, while retaining his post on the board (p), and as the powers of a managing director are very rarely defined in the articles, it being usually left to the directors to delegate to him such of their powers as they see fit—it would seem that it would be very difficult for a managing director to make out any sort of a contract under the articles conferring on him the powers of a managing partner—and if this is so it would seem that the company could, as a rule, decline to employ him as managing director, because his contract would usually be a mere contract of service and in no way incorporated in or part of the constitution of the company (q).

In other words, a company by its articles confers certain specific powers on its directors (r), and it is beyond its powers to take any of those powers from its directors without first altering its articles. The articles of a company usually confer no specific powers on its managing director, and it, or rather usually its directors, can therefore decline to employ its managing director, for that is not in any sense beyond the powers of the company. The articles usually provide for the directors retiring by rotation (s) and confer on the company the power of filling up the vacancies so occurring (t); they also provide for the office of a director being vacated in certain events, the directors being usually empowered to fill up casual vacancies (u), but a person appointed by the directors is often only to hold office until the next general meeting of the company, or for such time as the person whose place he takes would have held it (x).

The articles also provide for directors whose offices have not been filled up continuing in such offices, and empower the company to increase or reduce the number of directors (y). They sometimes also provide for the directors appointing additional or in some cases, where directors are likely to be frequently abroad, alternate directors.

They should empower the company to remove directors by extraordinary or special resolution (z); in such case it would seem that there is no need for the company to give the director any hearing in his own defence other than any hearing he may be entitled to as a member of the company (a).

In cases where a director has misconducted himself the company may, it would seem, even apart from any special power, dismiss him, for by his misconduct he has in effect declined to perform his contract, and the company may consequently treat him as having resigned (b). Moreover, the same rule holds good where he has misconducted himself in the course of a previous contract with the same company, and the company has only discovered the misconduct subsequently, misconduct will not be considered to have been waived unless the company has actual knowledge of the facts (c).

In such cases a director accused of misconduct would, it is thought, be entitled to be heard in his own defence (d); but in none of these cases will the Court be astute to see that matters have been conducted exactly as they would have been in a Court of justice (e).

The articles usually also provide that the office of a director shall be vacated on the happening of certain events. On the happening of any one of such events, the office will be vacated; there can be no question of the director being entitled to a special hearing (f), except possibly that the company may by summoning a meeting to consider his case treat him as a continuing director, and thereby give him a right to a hearing (g).

The events on which the office of a director is to be vacated will in all cases include the case of a director failing to obtain his qualification within a period of two months from the date of his appointment (h), or within the shorter time allowed by the articles, or of his ceasing to hold such shares after the expiration of such period (i). A director cannot be said to cease to hold his qualification shares if he has never had them (k); but this would seem to be unimportant now, having regard to the terms of the section. If a director's name is wrongfully taken off the register of members and an order to rectify the register is made, this will date back so as to prevent the office being vacated (l). Usually, too, the office will be vacated if a director holds any office of profit under the company other than that of a managing director or manager. Under this heading will, it seems, come the office of paid secretary (m), of paid trustee of a debenture trust deed (n), but not that of a receiver and manager appointed by the Court with a salary (o). A subscriber to the memorandum, who is to be deemed to be a director until directors are appointed, will under such a clause vacate his office of director on accepting a salaried post (p). The office of a director will also usually be vacated if he becomes bankrupt or insolvent (q), or a lunatic, but if the company chooses to appoint a bankrupt or insolvent that will not prevent his continuing to hold office under such a clause (r).

Sometimes, too, the office will be vacated if a director absents himself from board meetings for a certain period. In such case the period will begin to run from the first board meeting he does not attend, and will expire at the first board meeting after the period is over (s); but the expression "absents himself" in such an article apparently means something more than is absent. If a man is unavoidably absent (e.g. through illness), this will not be enough (t), but the office will be vacated under such a clause if the director's absence is merely occasioned by his having received medical advice that it would be better for him not to attend (u).

There is almost invariably a more or less stringent clause as to note (s); it is thought that a director would, within the meaning of the section, obtain his qualification even without allotment where there is such an article.

the office of a director being vacated if he is concerned in or participates in the profits (x) of contracts with the company, though such a clause often has a saving to the effect that it shall not apply if he discloses his interest, meaning the exact nature of his interest (y), to his co-directors or if he is only interested as a member of another company, in which latter case he will have only to disclose the fact of his membership (z). The proviso usually adds that he must not vote in such cases. A breach of such proviso would, however, probably not vacate the office (a), but if all the directors present when a contract is entered into are interested the company will not be bound, at all events where the other party knows the facts, even though the contract is adopted without a formal vote being taken (b). Apart from a provision in the articles a company cannot delegate the power of appointing directors (c).

Directors are usually given wide powers, and a liberal construction will be given to the clause conferring such powers (d). It would seem that where the directors are given all the powers of the company the company will, except in cases where the Statute requires that something shall be done by the company as a whole, not be entitled to interfere with the directors in the exercise of their powers (e); but where such powers are made subject to the control of the company in general meeting, as is the case under the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (f), or subject to regulations made by the company in general meeting (g), it will be otherwise.

(g) Cp. Table A, Clause 71;

The powers of directors are not suspended by the receipt of a requisition for a general meeting (h).

It is usual for the articles to authorize the directors to delegate any of their powers to committees of their number, and such a committee may, where that seems to be the intention of the article, consist of a single director (i); and it is also usual for the articles to authorize directors to delegate their powers to a manager or managing director, but it is thought that even under such powers the directors cannot completely resign all right of supervision over the acts of the committee or managing director, as the case may be (k).

Directors can, apart from such special powers, only act as a board (l), and so, apart from such provisions, no one director is in any sense the agent of or capable of binding the company. Probably, however, where all the directors agree to a particular course, it is not necessary for them to meet (m).

Notice must be given to all directors who are within reach of every board meeting, and they cannot waive their right to such notice (n); but where directors are abroad with the consent of their co-directors, such consent being necessary under the articles to prevent their office from being vacated, or where they are known to be travelling abroad, but their exact whereabouts is unknown, it will be unnecessary to give them notice (o). The notice must be reasonably long, and it would seem that what will be a reasonable length for a notice will be to a considerable extent determined by the practice that has prevailed in the particular company (p); but a board meeting summoned on short notice will, if the Court comes to the conclusion that it was so summoned with a view to excluding certain directors, be bad (q), and the Court will always interfere to prevent directors excluding a co-director (r). At the same time, the Court will always be slow to interfere with the acts of directors simply because there has been some slight informality or irregularity in the summoning of the meeting unless the objection is taken immediately it comes to the knowledge of the person aggrieved (s). As directors are a select body, it is their duty to attend meetings whenever they receive a reasonable notice if they can, and it is therefore not necessary for the notice to state the purpose of a meeting (t); but of course the articles may require particulars of the business to be transacted at meetings to be inserted on notices.

Where the articles state that there are to be a certain number of directors, this is apparently directory only (u), and the directors may act though their number has fallen below the minimum number, but it is otherwise where, as is usual, the articles provide that the directors are not to be less than a certain number. In such case, if there are not the minimum number of directors, the directors cannot act (x), and it is therefore usual for the articles to provide that the continuing directors may act, and the scope of such an article will not be limited to cases where there are more than the minimum number or to allowing continuing directors to act in ordinary business only (y). It is usual for the articles either to fix a quorum for directors' meetings, or to allow the directors themselves to do so, and the question arises where there is an article allowing continuing directors to act (z) whether such directors can only act where they are sufficient to form a quorum. The better opinion seems to be that under such an article continuing directors can act though there are too few of them to form a quorum (a). The case of Newhaven Local Board v. Newhaven School Board (b) forms the principal difficulty to this view, but that was the case of a local board constituted under Act of Parliament. The board was to consist of nine persons, and no business was to be transacted unless at least one-third of the whole number were present, and it was said that a provision that proceedings were not to be invalidated by vacancies only applied while there was a statutory quorum. It will be seen that this turned on a very definite provision forbidding all business, and the later provision was held not to override it. In the ordinary case it is clear that the article as to the minimum number of directors is overridden, and there does not seem any reason why the articles as to a quorum should not be so also. In the absence of any special provision as to quorum or until a quorum is appointed, a majority of the whole number of directors can act (c), but it would not seem any smaller number (d). As has been seen, this is the case also with subscribers to the memorandum of association (e), and it seems to accord with the older cases (f) on meetings, the rule as to directors' meetings being different on this point to the rule as to general meetings, owing to the fact that directors are a select body (e).

In ascertaining whether there is or is not a sufficient number of directors present to transact any business, directors who for any reason are not competent to vote will not be counted (g), and where more than one director is not competent to vote on a particular resolution, the resolution cannot be split up into a number of resolutions so as to count directors who are not competent to vote on part of it, on the part on which they are competent (h). Where directors have the power to fix a quorum and have not expressly done so, apparently the number who usually meet will constitute a quorum (i). Unless the articles otherwise provide, every director will have one vote at a directors' meeting (k). Most of the other points with regard to directors' meetings which are usually dealt with in the articles, e.g. as to who is to preside, adjournment, casting vote, etc., are, in the absence of such provision, governed by the same rules as in the absence of special provision govern general meetings of a company, and may be more conveniently discussed under that heading. It is thought that any one director may, in the absence of special regulation, summon a meeting of directors (l), but if there is a summons to a general meeting, a directors' meeting cannot without a separate summons be held directly after such meeting, unless, of course, all the directors happen to be present (m). Where all are present, the meeting may be very informal (n). Minutes of all meetings of directors and managers must be entered in books kept for that purpose, and such minutes are evidence of the proceedings if purporting to be signed by the chairman of the meeting or of the succeeding meeting, until the contrary is proved. Every meeting of directors or managers in respect of which minutes have been so made will be deemed to have been duly held and convened, and all proceedings had thereat to have been duly had and all appointments of directors or managers will be deemed valid (o). It is thought that the chairman may sign at any time and even after winding-up (p). The Act further provides that the Acts of a director or manager shall be valid notwithstanding any defect that may afterwards be discovered in his appointment or qualification (q). It is the defect that has to be discovered after the act, not merely the facts that cause the defect (r), nor must the word "qualification" in the section be read in the narrow sense of "holding his qualification shares" (s).

(k) Cp. Horbury Bridge Coal, Iron and Waggon Co. (1879), 11 C. D. 109. The effect of this section would seem to be that where a company has allowed persons to act as directors, even though they have not any right to do so, persons dealing with such directors will not be bound to inquire into their authority to act, and the company will be as much bound as though they were validly appointed directors (t). Moreover, the effect of the section seems to be even wider than this, for persons who have shares in the company will, at all events where there is the common form of article (u) validating the acts of such de facto directors (x), and probably where there is no such article (y), not be entitled to object to any act of such directors, done before the defect is discovered, on the ground of the defect; and it would appear that the company would be entitled to enforce acts done by such directors, even where the other party wishes to evade his obligations on the ground that the directors with whom he dealt were not validly appointed (z).

But this section will not protect or validate any act done, after all parties knew of the defect (a). De facto directors will be liable both criminally (b) and civilly (c) in the same way as de jure directors. Closely allied to this subject, is the question of how far persons dealing with the company are fixed with notice of any limitations there may be on the powers of the directors or director with whom they deal if such directors or director purport to act on behalf of the company. Such persons have notice not merely of the contents of the act, but also of the memorandum, and articles of association of the company, for these are public documents open to the inspection of all (d); but if any director or de facto director does an act which under the provisions of these documents he might have had authority to do, there the company will as against a person dealing with it be bound, even though the director or de facto director had not in fact authority, unless, of course, such person knew of the lack of authority.

Thus where directors have only power to borrow money with the consent of the company in general meeting, a lender may assume that such consent has been obtained (e), and he may also assume that a sufficient quorum of the board authorized the seal of the company being affixed to the instrument which gives him a charge (f), and where the continuing directors may act that there are sufficient of them to give a charge (g). Again, where the directors have power to appoint a committee consisting of one or more of their number (h), or a managing director, and to delegate their powers to such committee or managing director, a person may deal with any single director (i), or as the case may be with a managing director (k), as freely as he can with the board itself.

Where servants of the company have ordered goods and the company has taken delivery without protest, it cannot subsequently repudiate the purchase (l). These cases will, however, not extend to protect a person who has been injured by some act of a person who could have no express authority under the articles of the company to do the act, and from his position has no implied authority to do it (m).

Where directors have acted in such a way as to bind the company, in spite of the fact that they had no actual authority to do so (n), the person with whom the directors have dealt may possibly in some cases repudiate the dealing, unless the company has ratified it, before such repudiation (o).

With regard to contracts made by directors on behalf of a company, if such contracts are within the powers of the directors, the directors will usually not be liable on them (p) unless by their conduct during the negotiations they have put themselves into the position of principals, acting, as it were, as trustees and not as agents for the company (q); except in such cases, the person contracting with the company cannot set up any claim founded on contract against the directors personally or claim that they are trustees for him (r). Directors can, of course, only pledge the credit of the company itself, and not that of its members, and so even though they carry on business on behalf of the company in a foreign country, by the law of which every member is liable for the acts of the company, members will in no case be personally liable in the courts of this country for the debts of the company (s). But where directors have acted beyond their powers, there the act is their act, and not the act of the company, and they will be personally liable (t). In such cases it would seem from the cases cited that the person dealing with the company will not as against the directors be fixed with implied notice of the contents of the articles (u).

The question of how far a company is fixed with notice by the fact that its directors or one of them has knowledge is dealt with under debentures, the case where it usually occurs (uu).

With regard to the question of torts committed by directors in the course of their employment as directors, no doubt the director himself will usually be liable to the person wronged (x), but the company itself will also be liable, except in cases where the tort was committed by the director solely for his own purposes, and not with a view to forwarding the interests of the company (y), and in spite of contrary views which were at one time held (z), it would seem that it is now well settled that negligence, fraud, and malice are exactly on the same footing as other torts, and consequently that a company may be liable for them, although it has reaped no advantage from them (a).

At the same time where the directors of a company have conspired with other persons to commit a fraud the company can recover moneys paid by its directors to such other persons to further the fraud (b).

A company will not be liable where a director or some other person has committed frauds in the course of transactions, which are quite beyond the scope of any apparent authority he had (c).

The question of when directors will be liable for fraud has been fully dealt with under the heading of prospectus, but it may be said that apart from prospectus cases they will not be liable to outside persons for the acts of their co-directors, unless they have taken an active part in them (d). Directors are entitled to all expenses incurred by them in the actual execution of their duties as directors (e).

In the absence of special provision directors are not entitled to any fees for their services (f), and where there is a provision in the articles that does not in itself form a contract with the directors, but from such provision and the fact of the directors acting arises a presumption that they have agreed to serve on those terms and no other terms (g). Where the articles provide for a lump sum per annum to be paid whether to each director (h), or to the board (i), nothing will be payable for any fraction of a year during which the directors or any director has served. But it will be otherwise where the remuneration is to be " at the rate of " so much per annum (k). Where there is a lump sum to be divided among the directors as they may decide, the determination of the directors, as to the amount to be paid to any director, is a condition precedent to any action being brought (l) : though in one case where the board were entitled to remuneration to be set apart at such rate as the directors saw fit, it was held that in the absence of any sum being set apart for any director, the directors were entitled to have the remuneration distributed equally among them (m) : a director will not be entitled to have an order made against his co-directors directing them to decide on the distribution of the fund (n) ; where the directors are to decide on the distribution the Court will not readily interfere with their discretion, and it will be proper for them to decline to pay a director for a part of the year during which he has not acted (o).

Where the company in general meeting has to decide what the remuneration of the directors is to be, there can be no remuneration without such decision (p), and as the resolution will primâ facie only apply prospectively, directors will usually only be entitled to remuneration from the date of the first general meeting (q) : their remuneration will usually cease when the company goes into liquidation (r), but not on the appointment of a receiver and manager in a debenture-holders' action (s).

Directors may be entitled to their fees notwithstanding the fact that the company is doing badly (t), and where the company is entitled to commence business they will usually be entitled to them even if the company has not gone to allotment (u), and the fact that they have not taken their qualification shares will not disentitle them to their fees (x), though in such case the company will be entitled to retain the fees against the amount due in respect of qualification shares, if the director has entered into an enforceable contract to take such shares (y).

Although directors are primâ facie entitled to their fees regardless of the question whether the company has or has not made profits (z), it is, of course, competent for the company to provide by its articles that such fees shall only be payable out of profits, in such case even a resolution of the company will not entitle the directors to their fees where there have been no profits (a), they will be entitled to fees out of profits which after being put to a suspense account have been carried to profit and loss immediately before a winding-up (b), but not out of profits made by selling the whole concern with a view to a winding-up (c).

A resolution by directors to forego fees which they have not actually earned has been held to be unenforceable as being a nudum pactum, at all events where the resolution has not been communicated to the company (d); but it is otherwise where the resolution relates to fees which have not been actually earned and has been communicated to the company (e), and where the directors have agreed to forego their claims and the liquidator (if the company is in liquidation) or it would seem in other cases the company is a party to the agreement (f). The company cannot by altering its articles deprive its directors of their right to fees already earned, this being one of the terms of their contract of service (g). Not infrequently there is an article enabling directors to renounce their right to fees. The articles also usually authorize special remuneration for special services by any director, there should in case of such remuneration being granted be an entry in the minutes stating the special services, and also a resolution of de jure and not de facto directors (h).

De facto directors are not entitled to any remuneration (i), though the company can, when it has full knowledge of the facts, ratify their appointment so as to entitle them to remuneration from the time when they first acted (h), and the company, or, where directors are entitled to a lump sum between them, the directors, can recover fees paid to a de facto director under the belief that he was a de jure director (k).

A company can primâ facie not make presents to its directors where there are no profits (l), but it has been decided that it can make them reasonable presents where it is a going concern, because it may thereby at all events expect to get better service from its directors in the future, it probably (m) cannot make them presents when it is going into liquidation (n).

Mutual (p), the view was apparently taken that the presents were in fact given by the purchasing company; on any other view these cases seem not only inconsistent with the cases cited in the last note, but also with Bisgood v. Henderson's Transvaal Estates (q).

Where, as is almost always the case, the only document dealing with the remuneration of directors is the articles of a company, the Court cannot give them interest on their remuneration under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, though in a proper case it may, perhaps, do so by way of damages (r). Directors' fees are not, it is thought, due to them in their character of members, even when they must hold qualification shares, and they may therefore prove for them in a winding-up in competition with other creditors (s). It would seem that directors can borrow moneys to pay their fees (t), or set off their fees against calls which have not been made, under a power to accept payments in advance of calls, even if they know that a winding-up is imminent (u), if such payments do not amount to a fraudulent preference (x), but directors who make payments after a winding-up petition has been presented do so at their own risk, and unless such payments are in the ordinary course of business, they will usually not be allowed in a winding-up (y).

It would seem that where there is a dispute as to who are in fact directors, the Court will appoint a receiver and manager of the business of the company pending the decision of the dispute (z).

The Court has in a voluntary winding-up authorized the summoning of meetings to appoint directors, with a view to their forfeiting shares (a), and directors have been required to answer interrogatories after the commencement of a winding-up (b).

MANAGING DIRECTOR.

The articles usually empower the directors to appoint one of their number to be managing director, and to delegate to him such of their powers as they see fit, and to remunerate him. Probably under powers to delegate to committees and to remunerate for special services, the same result could be attained (c). If the articles give such a power to the directors the company cannot complain of the way they are exercising it, or appoint a managing director without first altering the articles (d).

Where a managing director is appointed for more than a year, the appointment should be in writing, and should define his powers by reference to the articles or otherwise, otherwise, owing to section 4 of the Statute of Frauds, he will not have any right of action if dismissed (e), though he may be entitled to prove for the period during which he has actually served (f). On ceasing to be a director, a man will cease to be a managing director, even though there is not the usual express provision to that effect in the articles (g), and it is therefore usual to provide that he shall not be liable to retire by rotation.

The duties of a managing director are to attend to the commercial part of the business of the company, and not to things which concern the company itself but not its business, and it would therefore appear doubtful whether the company will be liable if he makes misrepresentations with regard to transfers of shares and things of that nature (h), but where it is a question of contract persons dealing with the company may under such an article as is above mentioned assume that the managing director has such of the powers of the director as are requisite for entering into the contract (i). Directors cannot appoint a managing director on terms that he is to be free from their supervision (k).

A managing director cannot properly be described as a servant of the company (l), but he may be dismissed for misconduct, in which case he will not be entitled to his salary for the current term whether that is a year or a quarter or some different period (m), and he may retire on giving the directors notice of his intention so to do (n). Probably the Court will not give to a managing director specific performance of his contract (o). Where a managing director has entered into a contract in his own name, but on behalf of his company, he will not be allowed to claim the benefit of the contract for himself (p). Where a manager has entered into a contract to serve a company for a term of years and the company during that period goes into liquidation or has a receiver and manager appointed, the manager will be freed from any term in his contract requiring him not to carry on business, but he cannot make lists of the company's customers for his own use (q).

SECRETARY.

The position of a secretary to a limited company is usually the position of a servant (r), and his duties are rarely if ever defined by the articles. Apparently the company will not be estopped by his fraud even in cases where it was his duty to deal with the matter. Thus, where it was the duty of the secretary to certify transfers, when the certificates were left with him, the company were in no way liable on his certifying a transfer without the certificate being left (s), indeed, it would seem that a company will in no case be liable for the fraud of its secretary (t). Thus, a person who has been induced to take shares in a company by the fraudulent statements of the secretary, will have no remedy against the company (u), though, of course, he will have his remedy against the secretary (x), it is obvious that these remarks will apply with even greater force where the fraudulent statements are made for the secretary's own benefit (y).

A secretary has primâ facie no authority to bind a company either by contract (z), or by making admissions (a), but of course, where actual authority is shown, his signature will be sufficient to bind the company in cases within the Statute of Frauds (b), and the company will be liable for his acts (c). Misrepresentations by the secretary, even if innocent, will not bind the company (d); but it may, it would seem, be liable for his negligence in the ordinary course of his duty (e).

It is no part of the duty of a secretary to take a conveyance of property purchased by the company in his own name, and therefore, even assuming that his partners are liable for acts done by him in the ordinary course of his duty, they will not be liable for frauds rendered possible by the fact of property being so conveyed (f).

The position of secretary would primâ facie not appear to be a fiduciary one (g), but he may not bid on an auction of the company's property, where he has instructed the auctioneer himself (h). It is the duty of the secretary to prepare and send out notices—subject, of course, to the directions of the board to attend to callers and

Co. v. South London Tramways (1887), 18 Q. B. correspondence, to be present at the board meetings, and keep the minute books (i). It would seem clear that he will be in no case liable for the acts of the board unless he has in some way intermeddled and made himself a party to such acts (k).

The name and address of the secretary must be set out in the statutory report under section 65 of the Act ; he is liable to penalties under section 88 for failing to make due returns of allotments ; under section 99 for failing to comply with the requirements of the Act as to the registration of mortgages ; under section 102 for refusing inspection or not forwarding copies of documents ; under section 92 for failing to issue share certificates at the proper time ; under section 64 for knowingly being a party to a default in calling an annual general meeting.

If he is named in the articles as secretary he may make the statutory declaration requisite under section 17 for the incorporation of the company, and he may under section 87 make the statutory declaration required before it can obtain a certificate entitling it to commence business.

Such are some, at all events, of the duties and liabilities of a secretary of a company. He must also under section 113 sign the balance sheet of a banking company, and he may, if duly authorized, authenticate documents under section 117.

The fact that he has certain knowledge in his capacity of secretary of one company, will not fix another company with notice unless he owes a duty to the former company to give the notice, and to the latter to receive it, and not even then if he has been guilty of fraud, or even irregularity (l). He will probably be a servant of a company for the purpose of the preferential payment sections, if he has fixed hours of attendance (m). It would seem that the offices of director and secretary are so incompatible that the same man cannot hold both (n). Where the secretary of a company has filed an affidavit in opposition to the winding-up petition, and is cross-examined on it, the petitioner on such cross-examination has the right to have the company's books and papers produced for the purpose of testing the secretary's evidence, but for no other purpose (o).

A secretary cannot claim remuneration under a contract made before the incorporation of the company, and if his rights depend on the articles, he can claim remuneration up to the date of the winding-up of the company, but not damages for loss of employment after that date (p); where his salary is to be fixed by the company in general meeting, as under section 91 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845, the fact that no meeting has been held will not be a defence to an action by him for his salary (q). A secretary has not a lien for his remuneration on the books, etc., of the company (r).

MEETINGS.

The common law rule on the subject of meetings of an indefinite body like a company appears to be that the vote of the majority of those present at the meeting is the vote of the whole body if all members of the body who are within summoning distance have been duly summoned (s).

The Companies Act, 1862, and the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, provide that certain powers of the company shall be exercised by "special resolution," that certain other powers shall be exercised by "extraordinary resolution," and that certain other powers shall be exercised by the company in general meeting, and for the rest (t) they leave it to the company itself to decide in what manner it will exercise its powers.

A resolution will be an extraordinary resolution when it has been passed by a majority of not less than three-fourths of such members entitled to vote as are present in person or by proxy (where proxies are allowed) at a general meeting, of which notice specifying the intention to propose the resolution as an extraordinary resolution has been duly given.

subsequent general meeting, of which notice has been duly given, and held after an interval of not less than fourteen days (u) nor more than one month (x), from the date of the first meeting (y).

At any meeting at which an extraordinary resolution is submitted to be passed or a special resolution is submitted to be passed or confirmed, a declaration of the chairman that the resolution is carried will, unless a poll is demanded, be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the resolution (z).

At any meeting at which an extraordinary resolution is submitted to be passed or a special resolution is submitted to be passed or confirmed a poll may be demanded by three persons for the time being entitled according to the articles to vote unless the articles of the company require a demand by such number of such persons, not in any case exceeding five, as may be specified in the articles.

When a poll is demanded in accordance with this section, in computing the majority on the poll reference will be had to the number of votes to which each member is entitled by the articles of the company.

For the purposes of the section notice of a meeting will be deemed to be duly given and the meeting to be duly held when the notice is given, and the meeting held in manner provided by the articles (a).

Even where the Act requires that a thing shall be done by a special resolution, or by an extraordinary resolution, such special or extraordinary resolution will be unnecessary if all the shareholders (u) Fourteen days means fourteen clear days, Railway Sleepers Supply Co. (1885), 29 C. D. 204; and see Goldsmith's Co. v. West Metropolitan Railway, [1904] 1 K. B. 1, as to the mode of computing time. If a resolution which has not been validly passed, owing to the requisite time not having elapsed, has been acted on, the company or its members cannot as against its creditors set up the informality of the resolution: Miller's Dale and Ashwood Dale Lime Co. (1885), 31 C. D. 211; see too Ho Tung v. Man On Insurance Co., [1902] A. C. 232.

(x) "Month" means "calendar month" in an Act of Parliament, Interpretation Act, 1889, s. 3; but not in other documents: Bruner v. Moore, [1904] 2 Ch. 304. It would appear from the cases cited in the preceding note that the last day on which a confirmatory meeting can be held will be the same day as that on which the first meeting was held, but in the succeeding month; if the succeeding month has not got such a day, then the confirmatory meeting cannot be held later than the last day of such month; see also Freeman v. Read (1863), 4 B. & S. 174; Radcliffe v. Bartholomew, [1892] 1 Q. (y) It will be noticed that this provision only requires the resolution to be passed in the same manner as an extraordinary resolution, and the notice convening the first meeting need not therefore state that the resolution to be proposed is to be proposed "as an extraordinary resolution"; Penarth Pontoon Slipway and Ship-repairing Co., [1911] W. acquiesce in the thing, and such acquiescence will be presumed where a long course of dealing on the footing that the thing has been validly done can be shown (b); but where anything is ultra vires the company even the assent of every shareholder will not bind the company (c).

Where the Act empowers a company to do any special thing by extraordinary or special resolution, e.g. to alter the articles or to reduce its capital, any provision whether in the memorandum or articles empowering it to do that thing in a different way or taking away the power, will be bad (d), and it seems doubtful whether the company can effectually contract itself out of such power (e).

A copy of every special and extraordinary resolution must within fifteen days from the confirmation of the special resolution, or from the passing of the extraordinary resolution, as the case may be, be printed and forwarded to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, who must record the same (f).

Where articles have been registered, a copy of every special resolution for the time being in force must be embodied in or annexed to every copy of the articles issued after the confirmation of the resolution.

Where articles have not been registered, a copy of every special resolution must be forwarded in print to any member at his request, on payment of one shilling or such less sum as the company may direct.

If a company makes default in printing or forwarding a copy of a (f) The Registrar will decline to register special resolutions which show on their face they are bad as not having complied with the section (e.g. where the 14 days between the two meetings have not elapsed); but he is not concerned with questions such as whether the resolution was ultra vires or not; he will not register an alteration in the articles of a company authorized to omit the word "Limited" from its name unless the Board of Trade have approved the alteration. He will accept a resolution for filing after the expiration of the 15 days allowed.

special or extraordinary resolution to the registrar it will be liable to a fine not exceeding two pounds for every day during which the default continues.

If a company makes default in embodying in or annexing to a copy of its articles or in forwarding in print to a member when required by the section a copy of a special resolution, it will be liable to a fine not exceeding one pound for each copy in respect of which default is made.

Every director and manager of a company who knowingly and wilfully authorizes or permits any default by the company in complying with the requirement of the section, will be liable to the same penalty as is imposed by the section on the company for the default (g).

The Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, requires every company to hold a general meeting at least once in every calendar year; such meeting must be held not more than fifteen months after the holding of the last preceding general meeting, and, if not so held, the company, and every director, manager, secretary, and other officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default, will, on conviction, be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds.

When default has been made in holding a meeting of the company in accordance with the provisions of this section, the Court may, on the application of any member of the company, call or direct the calling of a general meeting of the company (h). It would appear that this section will have been complied with if the company summons an extraordinary meeting (i), but, in any case, the provisions (k) of section 112 of the Act as to the appointment of auditors apply, and auditors must be appointed annually.

In addition, every company limited by shares and registered on or after the 1st of January, 1901, must, within a period of not less than one month nor more than three months from the date at which the company is entitled to commence business, hold a general meeting of the members of the company. Such meeting is called the statutory meeting (kk).

The directors must at least seven days before the day on which the meeting is held, forward a report, in the Act called the statutory report, to every member of the company and to every other person entitled under the Act to receive it (l).

(g) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 70. The section apparently applies to special resolutions which are required by the articles of a company, but not by the Act.

(h) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 64. The offence can be prosecuted under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts, but in Scotland all prosecutions under the section must be at the instance of the Lord Advocate or a procurator fiscal as the Lord Advocate directs: ibid., s. 276.

(k) See post, pp. 405 et seq., as to these.

(l) I.e. debenture and debenture stock holders, Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, ss. 114 and 285.

The statutory report must be certified by not less than two directors of the company or where there are less than two directors by the sole director and manager, and must state :—

(a) The total number of shares allotted, distinguishing shares allotted as fully or partly paid-up otherwise than in cash, and stating in the case of shares partly paid-up the extent to which they are so paid-up, and in either case the consideration for which they have been allotted ;

(b) The total amount of cash received by the company in respect of such shares, distinguished as aforesaid ;

(c) An abstract of the receipts of the company on account of its capital, whether from shares or debentures or debenture stock, and of the payments made thereout, up to a date within seven days of the date of the report, exhibiting under distinctive headings the receipts of the company from shares and debentures or debenture stock and other sources, the payments made thereout, and particulars concerning the balance remaining in hand, and an account or estimate of the preliminary expenses of the company ;

(d) The names and addresses and descriptions of the directors, auditors (if any), managers (if any), and secretary of the company ;

(e) The particulars of any contract, the modification of which is to be submitted to the meeting for its approval together with the particulars of the modification or proposed modification.

The statutory report must, so far as it relates to the shares allotted by the company, and to the cash received in respect of such shares, and to the receipts and payments of the company on capital account, be certified as correct by the auditors, if any, of the company.

The directors must cause a copy of the statutory report, certified as by this section is required, to be filed (m) with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies forthwith after the sending thereof to the members of the company.

The directors must cause a list showing the names, descriptions, and addresses of the members of the company, and the number of shares held by them respectively, to be produced at the commencement of the meeting, and to remain open and accessible to any member of the company during the continuance of the meeting.

(m) In private companies copies of the statutory report need not be filed or forwarded to any one : ibid., s. 65 (10). In such companies the statutory meeting must be held: Gardner v. Iredale, [1912] W. N. 93.

The members of the company present at the meeting are at liberty to discuss any matter relating to the formation of the company, or arising out of the statutory report, whether previous notice has been given or not, but no resolution of which notice has not been given in accordance with the articles may be passed.

The meeting may adjourn from time to time, and at any adjourned meeting any resolution of which notice has been given in accordance with the articles, either before or subsequently to the former meeting, may be passed, and the adjourned meeting will have the same powers as an original meeting.

If a petition is presented to the Court in manner provided by Part IV. of the Act for winding up the company on the ground of default in filing the statutory report or in holding the statutory meeting, the Court may, instead of directing that the company be wound up, give directions for the statutory report being filed or a meeting being held, or make such other order as may be just (o).

In addition to these meetings, extraordinary general meetings of the company are at times summoned, to transact special business of the company.

In default of and subject to any regulations in the articles, any five members of the company may summon a meeting (p), it has been held (q) that these regulations apply not only where the regulations are silent on the mode of summoning a meeting, but also where they provide that the directors shall summon a meeting, and there are no directors to do so. The articles usually provide that the directors of the company may summon meetings (r), and notwithstanding anything in the articles of a company, the directors of a company must, on the requisition of the holders of not less than one-tenth of the issued capital of the company upon which all calls or other sums then due have been paid, forthwith proceed to convene an extraordinary general meeting of the company.

The requisition must state the objects of the meeting, and must be signed by the requisitionists and deposited at the office of the company, and may consist of several documents in like form, each signed by one or more requisitionists (s).

(q) Brick and Stone Co., [1878] W. N. 140; it may be doubtful whether this decision was good law under the Companies Act, 1862, s. 52, which only applied "in default of any regulations," but it would seem that a similar decision is likely to be come to under the existing section, which applies "in default of and subject to any regulations"; in such case the provisions of s. 66 of the Act as to requisitionists' summoning meetings, even if incorporated in the articles, scarcely seem to apply, for the existence of directors seems to be contemplated by such provisions.

(s) In the case of shares held by joint holders, all must sign the requisition: Patentwood Keg Syndicate v. Pearse, [1906] W. N. 164.

If the directors of the company do not proceed to cause a meeting to be held within twenty-one days from the date of the requisition being so deposited, the requisitionists, or a majority of them in value, may themselves convene the meeting, but any meeting so convened, must not be held after three months from the date of the deposit.

If at any such meeting a resolution requiring confirmation at another meeting is passed, the directors must forthwith convene a further extraordinary general meeting for the purpose of considering the resolution, and, if thought fit, of confirming it as a special resolution ; and, if the directors do not convene the meeting within seven days from the date of the passing of the first resolution, the requisitionists, or a majority of them in value, may themselves convene the meeting.

Any meeting convened under this section by the requisitionists must be convened in the same manner, as nearly as possible, as that in which meetings are to be convened by directors (t).

It would appear very doubtful whether the Court can, except in cases coming within section 64 or section 65 of the Act, or where a winding-up petition has been presented or a winding-up is going on under sections 145 and 219, convene a meeting (u), and at all events, it is not its practice to do so where there are other persons who can do so (x), but it will of course in some cases practically force persons who can call a meeting to do so, when they are parties to an action (y).

In convening a meeting the first question that must present itself to the minds of the conveners is, has the company power to do the thing proposed ? Of course, if the thing is ultra vires the whole company, there is an end of the matter ; but if it is simply forbidden by the articles, or if the articles are silent on the subject, and the Act empowers the company to do it when, and only when, the articles authorize its being done, then it will be necessary to consider whether it will not be necessary in the first place to hold meetings, to alter the articles, and then subsequently to hold meetings or a meeting for the purpose of sanctioning the course proposed. Where the doing of a particular act is authorized by the Act without further formality if the articles give power to do it, and there is no special provision as to the manner in which the thing can be done (z), there it would seem to be unnecessary to do more than pass a special resolution for the doing of the thing, for the Court will treat this as amounting to an alteration of the articles, coupled with an authority to the directors to exercise the power conferred by such alteration. Thus, a mere resolution to increase capital (a), or to purchase the company's shares, though such purchase is forbidden by the articles (b), or to accept surrenders of such shares (c) have been held good, without the company first altering its articles; but where the step contemplated can only be taken (1) if there is a power in the articles; and (2) a special resolution is passed; there it will be necessary first to alter the articles and then to pass the special resolution (d). The distinction probably being that in no case can the thing be done until the articles give power to do it; but that if once there is a resolution which can effect such alteration the Court will assume that the company or its directors exercised the power as they intended to do, unless it is impossible to come to this conclusion owing to the fact that insufficient meetings have been held. The case of Imperial Hydropathic Hotel Co. v. Hampson (e) probably depends on the fact that there was never any intention to alter the articles, but only an intention of not abiding by them in a particular case.

In Tumacacori Mining Co. (1874), 17 Eq. 534, MALINS, V.C., said he had jurisdiction to call a meeting, but in London Joint Stock Coal Co. (1869), 8 Eq. 146, the same judge said he had no such power where he had not jurisdiction to make a winding-up order.

(x) Cp. Macdougall v. Gardiner (1875), 1 C. D. 13, at pp. 26 and 27 ; Mason v. Harris (1879), 11 C. D. 97.

Where an alteration of the articles followed by a special resolution is necessary, the matter can be carried through in three meetings, the first part of the resolution for exercising the power being passed immediately after the resolution confirming the alteration of the articles (f).

Where the secretary or some other unauthorized person has without authority from the board issued a notice summoning a meeting, there it would seem that any resolution come to by such meeting will be bad (g), unless the notice is subsequently ratified by (z) Or probably if there was a provision in the Act which enabled the power to be exercised without having more than one meeting.

At the time that this case and the case cited in the previous note were decided, it was thought that a company could purchase or accept a surrender of its shares, if its articles authorised it to do so. This was of course wrong: Trevor v. Whitworth (1887), 12 A. C. 409.

(e) (1882) 23 C. D. 1. The notice was, as a matter of fact, insufficient in this case, but the decision did not turn on that alone; in Boschoek Proprietary v. Fuke, [1906] 1 Ch. 148, there was no special resolution at all.

the board (h), and the result will, it would seem, be the same where a so-called board meeting, at which some non-directors have been admitted and some directors have been excluded, has convened the meeting (i). But it is not every informality in the board meeting convening a general meeting of the company which will invalidate the resolutions of the general meeting. Thus such resolutions have been held good where de facto directors were present at the board meeting (k), where there was not a quorum there, and no immediate objection was taken (l), and where the notice of the board meeting was too short, but no immediate objection was taken (m). Persons requisitioning for a meeting under section 66 of the Act cannot validly call a meeting till the time allowed by the section to the directors for summoning a meeting has expired (o).

The common law rule as to notices is, that except where the charter provides that certain business is to be transacted on a certain day, notice of the meeting and of the business to be transacted thereat must be given to every member within reach of such notice (p).

The common form of article usually provides that notice of a certain length must be given to each member, and that such notice must specify the place, the day, and the hour of meeting, and in the case of special business, the general nature of such business (q). The articles usually go on to define what is special business (r). Turning to the contents of the notice under such a clause, notice cannot be given that a meeting will be held on certain contingencies happening, e.g. on a resolution at a previous meeting being passed (s), unless, indeed, the notice goes on to say that if the contingencies happen, or, if preferred, if they do not happen, further notice will be given (t); if there is an absolute notice of a meeting, the fact that some (u), or it would seem all (x), the business to be transacted thereat is in its nature contingent, will apparently not invalidate the notice, and there is nothing in the Act to prevent, even in the case of special or extraordinary resolutions, the articles providing for notices of contingent meetings being given (y), it is not unusual to provide that notice of two meetings may be given by one notice, even though the second meeting is only to be held in the contingency of certain resolutions being passed at the first meeting, such a provision being often very convenient in the case of special resolutions (y). The notice must state the resolution to be passed in such a way as fairly to state the purpose for which the meeting is convened, so that every shareholder may make up his mind whether he will or will not attend, with knowledge of the result of his act. If the notice complies with these requirements, it will not be construed with excessive strictness. There is nothing to prevent an explanatory circular being sent round, showing the purpose of the resolutions, and in such case the circular and the notice will be read together (a).

If the proposed resolution involves an alteration of the articles, it will be unnecessary to say so, for every shareholder will be taken to have a knowledge of the contents of the articles of his company (b); again, if the resolution is beyond the directors' powers owing to their being personally interested in a contract which it proposes to confirm, the notice need not state the reason why the meeting is summoned (c); but a notice to sanction an agreement for the sale of the assets of the company will not be a sufficient notice if the agreement contains clauses giving special advantages to the directors (d), for in such case there are in reality two proposals, and only one of them is set out in the resolution.

When the resolution is to substitute new articles for old, unless the new articles simply bring the old ones up to date or involve a change of form, it would seem necessary in most cases, to show what the proposed alterations are, e.g. by sending copies of the new regulations round showing the alterations. In many cases merely sending copies of the new articles without indicating the alterations would not be enough (e).

If it is proposed that the company shall go into winding-up under section 182 (3) because it cannot by reason of its liabilities continue its business, this fact should be clearly set out in the notice (f), otherwise a shareholder will be entitled to assume that a confirmatory meeting is necessary (g). Where a reconstruction is to be proposed under section 192, the fact that such reconstruction is to be carried out under that section should appear in the notice (h). Even in the case of a special resolution it is not necessary that the resolution which appears in the notice should be passed without amendment (i), but in the case of a meeting for confirming a resolution as a special resolution, no amendment will be in order, for there it is simply a question of yes or no: is the resolution to be passed? (k). The notice for such a resolution should set out the resolution which has been passed, and which it is proposed to confirm (l).

But though amendments may usually be brought forward and passed at meetings, they must be amendments pertinent to the business mentioned in the notice. Thus, an amendment to a resolution for appointing certain persons directors, may provide for the appointment of additional persons as directors (m), and where the resolution is dealing with the remuneration of directors the remuneration proposed may be altered (n).

Again, on a resolution for altering voting rights and restricting the right of recent transferees to vote, an amendment striking out the restriction would be good, but not one altering the directors' qualification (o). It is also competent for a meeting to deal with business which is incidental to the business specified in the notice, thus, on a winding-up resolution it has been held to be competent for them to appoint a liquidator (p), and where a liquidator is named in the notice to appoint some other person as liquidator (q).

But it is not competent to a meeting to drop the resolution mentioned in the notice, and to substitute a fresh resolution which is of such a nature that notice of it should have been given, and so on a notice to pass a resolution to enter into winding-up for the purpose of reconstruction, it is not competent to pass a resolution for winding-up without more (r). But where the notice deals with two separate resolutions, the failure of one will not invalidate the other, even in cases where they are closely connected. Thus, where there are separate resolutions for a winding-up and a sale to another company, the winding-up will be good even where the sale for any reason falls through (s).

In the absence of special provision in the articles no notice need be given of an adjourned meeting, but without notice the adjourned meeting cannot transact any business except business left unfinished at the previous meeting (t). Occasionally the articles contain provisions enabling any shareholder to give notice that he proposes to move a resolution, if he leaves notice of such resolution at the office of the company a certain time before the meeting, the time mentioned being usually less than the time prescribed for notices of the meetings, such a provision will only allow of business which is ancillary or incidental to the main business of the meeting being brought forward (u).

The notice must be given to every member within reach (x), unless the articles contain anything to the contrary. Probably mere absence abroad will not be enough to disentitle a member to notice; but if he is somewhere where it would be impossible to get hold of him in time or his whereabouts is unknown, that would in most cases be sufficient to excuse a notice being given (y). notice to even one shareholder who is entitled to a notice will apart from special provision invalidate the meeting (z), unless such shareholder has by lying by and not objecting disentitled himself to complain, it is usual to provide that the accidental omission to give any notice shall not invalidate the meeting. Notice to a member on the register will be well given even if the register is subsequently rectified retrospectively (a).

In default of and subject to any regulations in the articles, meetings may be summoned by seven days' notice in writing served on every member in manner in which notices are required to be served by Table A (b). These provisions are :—

110. A notice may be given by the company to any member either personally, or by sending it by post to him to his registered address, or (if he has no registered address in the United Kingdom) to the address, if any, within the United Kingdom supplied by him to the company for the giving of notices to him.

Where a notice is sent by post, service of the notice shall be deemed to be effected by properly addressing, prepaying, and posting a letter containing the notice, and unless the contrary is proved to have been effected at the time at which the letter would be delivered in the ordinary course of post (c).

111. If a member has no registered address in the United Kingdom, and has not supplied to the company an address within the United Kingdom for the giving of notices to him, a notice addressed to him, and advertised in a newspaper circulating in the neighbourhood of the registered office of the company, shall be deemed to be duly given to him on the day on which the advertisement appears (d).

112. A notice may be given by the company to the joint holders of a share by giving the notice to the joint holder named first in the register in respect of the share (e).

absence abroad was in all cases a sufficient reason for not giving notice. Probably neither of these cases applies where the provisions of the existing Table A or similar Articles are applicable.

(c) It is better to provide for notices being served at the time of being put in the post office or within 24 hours after, otherwise one is liable to get into the difficulties exemplified by Doogan v. Colquhoun, [1899] W. N. 148, 20 L. R. Ir. 361. It is thought that apart from special provision, the rule in Henthorn v. Fraser, [1892] 2 Ch. 27, does not apply to notices of meetings; see the case in the next note, but see London and Staffordshire Fire Insurance Co. (1883), 24 C. D. 149.

(d) Where notice is by advertisement, this would appear apart from special provision to be the rule: Mercantile Investment and General Trust Co. v. International Co. of Mexico, [1893] 2 Ch. 484 n., a case which decides that, apart from special provision, notice by advertisement is the ordinary way of summoning meetings.

(e) This would probably not be sufficient apart from special provision; cp. Patentwood Keg Syndicate v. Pearse, [1906] W. N. 164.

113. A notice may be given by the company to the persons entitled to a share in consequence of the death or bankruptcy of a member by sending it through the post in a prepaid letter addressed to them by name or by the title of representatives of the deceased, or trustee of the bankrupt or by any like description, at the address, if any, in the United Kingdom supplied for the purpose by the persons claiming to be so entitled, or (until such an address has been so supplied) by giving the notice in any manner in which the same might have been given if the death or bankruptcy had not occurred (f).

114. Notice of every general meeting shall be given in some manner hereinbefore authorized to (a) every member of the company (including bearers of share warrants) except those members who (having no registered address within the United Kingdom) have not supplied to the company an address within the United Kingdom for the giving of notices to them; and also to (b) every person entitled to a share in consequence of the death or bankruptcy of a member, who, but for his death or bankruptcy, would be entitled to receive notice of the meeting. No other person shall be entitled to receive notices of general meetings.

With regard to the question of the length of the notice which is necessary under the articles, this is usually a certain number of days, often seven. The rule for computing time in such cases is, apart from anything in the articles to the contrary (g), to exclude both the day of service and the day of meeting, the simplest way of working the matter out being to reduce the time to one day. Thus, in the case of a seven days' notice given on the 1st of January, the 2nd would not be counted, for there would be no interval of one day, and as the meeting could only be held on the 3rd if it were a one-day notice, it can only be held on the 9th with a seven days' notice (h). The word "month" in articles of association would, apart from provision to the contrary in the articles, mean lunar month (i). Directors have apparently no power to postpone a meeting which has once been summoned (k).

(f) It would seem that, apart from special provision, persons entitled on death or bankruptcy are not entitled to notice: Allen v. Gold Reefs of West Africa, [1900] 1 Ch. 656; and see James v. Buena Ventura, [1896] 1 Ch. 456; and New Zealand Gold Extraction Co. v. Peacock, [1894] 1 Q. B. 622.

(g) Cp. The Pavilion, Newcastle-upon-Tyne, [1911] W. N. 235, where an article dealing with notices generally was held not to apply to notices of meetings, as it did apply to certain other notices, and another article required seven clear days' notice for a meeting.

(i) Bruner v. Moore, [1904] 1 Ch. 305. Usually the definition clause in the articles defines month as meaning calendar month. The Interpretation Act, 1889, makes the word mean calendar month where it occurs in a statute.

(k) Smith v. Paringa, [1906] 2 Ch. 193.

With regard to the actual meeting, there is usually a provision in the articles as to what number of members is to constitute a quorum, and as to what is to happen in the event of there being no quorum (l). If there is not such a provision a majority of those present can bind the company (m), persons who are present but who do not vote do not, it is thought, count for this purpose (n); but where, as in the case of a special or an extraordinary resolution, a specified majority of those present is requisite, there such persons must be counted (o). It would seem, however, that in all cases, unless the articles otherwise provide, there must be something which can in a reasonable sense be called a meeting, i.e., there must be two members present (p). In computing a quorum, proxies (q) and members not entitled to vote (r) are not counted, and even where there has been a quorum at a meeting, the meeting cannot transact any business after the members present have ceased to be sufficient to constitute a quorum (s).

The first business of the meeting is to elect a chairman (t), but usually the articles provide for this, either naming a particular person or the chairman of the board, and providing that in his absence the directors present may choose one of their own number to preside. The duties of the chairman are to preserve order, and to take care that proceedings are conducted in a proper manner, and that the sense of the meeting is properly ascertained with regard to any question that is before the meeting (u).

(u) National Dwellings Society v. Sykes, [1894] 3 Ch. 159.

The question of whether the power of adjourning the meeting is in the chairman or in the meeting itself is a somewhat difficult one. It would seem quite clear that a chairman cannot at his own will and pleasure adjourn a meeting so as to prevent its transacting the business it was convened for, and that if he does this the meeting may elect a new chairman, and proceed with the business (x). Probably where it is impossible to conduct the business properly the chairman has power to adjourn the meeting (y). Where the power of adjournment is in the chairman with the consent of the meeting, as is not uncommonly provided by the articles, the chairman is not bound to adjourn a meeting though the majority desire it (z). After the chairman has taken his seat it is usual to read the minutes of the previous meeting, and the chairman, when such minutes are approved, signs them. The secretary will then usually read the notice of the meeting (a).

The usual practice is for each motion to be proposed and seconded; but this would appear to be unnecessary in the case of a motion from the chair, and the fact that a proposal has not been seconded would, it is thought, not affect the validity of a resolution passing it (b).

It is not right to put the resolutions which are before the meeting en bloc, each resolution should be separately put to the meeting (c), but where it is a question of electing a board of directors who are to act together, it would seem to be right to put the names of all who are to be elected together as one resolution (d).

It is the chairman's duty to decide whether any amendment which is duly proposed and seconded is in order, and if any amendment is so brought forward, it need not necessarily be reduced to writing—all that is required is that such amendment should be sufficiently definite (e). A shareholder voting on the resolution will not thereby be precluded from subsequently raising the objection that the chairman has ruled out an amendment which he ought to have put to the meeting (e).

Where an amendment has been carried it should be put to the meeting as a substantive resolution.

Business mentioned in the notice may be dropped, and a resolution which does not itself require a notice be substituted (f).

Primâ facie every shareholder has a right to be heard on every question (g), but where the meeting has listened for a reasonable time it will be competent for the chairman, at all events with the consent of the meeting, to apply the closure (h).

It would seem that speeches or reports made by directors (i) or shareholders (k) at meetings, will in the absence of malice be privileged if they contain libellous statements. Newspaper reporters have no right to attend company meetings (l), but if they are present it would seem that this will not usually take away the privilege of a speaker at the meeting (m); newspapers in publishing the reports of speeches at meetings will, it would seem, be entitled to claim privilege if the matter is one of public interest, but not otherwise (n).

It is the chairman's business to ascertain the sense of the meeting. This is done in the first instance by a show of hands. On a show of hands apart from anything very special in the articles, each member present will have one vote only (o), and even on a special resolution proxies will not, unless they are held by a person not otherwise entitled to a vote, be counted (p). The Act provides that a company which is a member of another company may, by resolution of the directors, authorize any of its officials or any other person to act as its representative at any meeting of that other company, and that the person so authorized shall be entitled to exercise the same powers on behalf of the company which he represents as if he were an individual shareholder of that other company (q).

A person appointed under this section could presumably vote on a show of hands. Presumably also committees or other persons representing lunatic members (r), executors or administrators of deceased members (s), and trustees of bankrupt members can, at all events where they are authorized by the articles, exercise the same powers of voting as the person whom they represent could have exercised. Other persons are not members, and cannot, therefore, it is thought, vote on special or extraordinary resolutions; but there is nothing to prevent the articles authorizing them to vote on other matters. There is nothing to prevent any class of shareholder being excluded from voting altogether (t).

Apart from special provisions in the articles, and there should always be such a provision, the chairman will not have a casting vote either on a show of hands or at a poll (u). If there is not such a provision it would seem that any proposition brought forward will, if there be an equality of votes, fall to the ground (x). A casting vote will be in addition to any other vote the chairman may have (u), and if there is a doubt, some of the votes may be received contingently (y). The chairman then declares the result of the voting on the show of hands. If the matter before the meeting is an extraordinary or special resolution, then a declaration by the chairman that a resolution is carried (z) will be conclusive evidence of the fact without proof of the number or proportion of the votes recorded in favour of or against the resolution unless a poll is demanded by three persons entitled according to the articles to vote, unless the articles require a demand by a specified number of such persons not in any case exceeding five (a), in which case presumably such number of persons entitled according to the articles to vote as is specified in the articles may demand a poll.

If, in making such a declaration, the chairman, after saying that the resolution is carried, goes on to state the number of votes on each side, and such further statement shows that the resolution is not in fact carried or carried by the requisite majority, it would appear that the Court will consider whether the resolution has, in fact, been carried (b), but, except in this case and in a case where there has been fraud, the court will not go behind the chairman's declaration (c).

In other cases the chairman's declaration will be primâ facie evidence (d) both on a show of hands and on a poll; but it is not at all uncommon to have an article providing that his decision as to whether a resolution has been carried or carried by a particular majority or lost shall be conclusive evidence.

Where there is an article providing that votes tendered at a meeting and not disallowed at such meeting shall be valid for all purposes, the decision of the chairman allowing them can, in the absence of fraud, not be questioned after the meeting (e). Any voter is entitled, but subject to the provisions of the articles and the provisions in the case of extraordinary and special resolutions above referred to, to demand a poll (f); but persons holding proxies may not make such demand in the name of the person whom they represent or in their character of holders of such proxies (g). A poll may be demanded by the requisite number privately before the meeting, but if the demand is challenged at the meeting, it must be justified (h).

The effect of such demand is to do away with the preceding show of hands altogether (i), and a demand for a poll cannot be withdrawn after the meeting has been terminated, at all events where it has been "seconded" by a person who does not consent to the withdrawal (k). The articles not infrequently provide that there shall be no poll on a question of adjournment or the election of a chairman, and in one case a point was raised but not decided as to whether there could, apart from such an article, be a poll on a question of adjournment (l). The question of adjournment in this case was a matter for the consent of the meeting, but it is thought that there was nothing in this point which was based on the inaccurate argument (m), that a poll could not be taken at once. Even persons not present at the meeting may appear and vote at the poll (n), but probably if it is a question of obtaining the consent of the meeting or of the members present (o), or choosing a chairman, the poll would have to be taken at once (p). The right time to demand a poll would seem to be immediately after the chairman's declaration on the show of hands (q).

The decision of when and where the poll is to be held would, apart from any special provision in the articles (r), appear to be a matter for the chairman of the meeting (s). In the absence of a special provision in the articles a poll cannot be taken by sending polling papers to members with directions that they are to be left with the company before a certain day (t). On a poll the number of votes each member has, and also proxies, will be counted. Not infrequently scrutineers are appointed, but the result of the poll should be declared by the chairman (u).

Where there has been an adjournment, the question may some day arise as to what is the date of the meeting, for the purpose of a special resolution which must be confirmed "at a subsequent general meeting . . . held after an interval of not less than fourteen days nor more than one month from the date of the first meeting" (x), Scadding v. Lorant (y), and the authorities there cited seem to suggest that the date of the original meeting is the date of the meeting however many times it may be adjourned; but this would cause two difficulties: firstly, the confirmatory meeting could be indefinitely adjourned, unless, indeed, it could be said that it was not "held" within the meaning of the section until it was completed; secondly, where the first meeting was adjourned for more than fourteen days, the confirmatory resolution could be held at the same time as the adjourned meeting, there being an interval of not less than fourteen days from the date of the original meeting. Having regard to these considerations, it would seem that the section will be satisfied if the two resolutions are actually passed at an interval of not less than fourteen days or more than one month from one another (a).

It would seem that where, as in the case of extraordinary resolutions, a particular majority is required, a bare majority may not decide to adjourn because they know that they have not that majority present (b).

Every company must cause minutes of all proceedings of general meetings to be entered in books kept for the purpose; any such minute, if purporting to be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which the proceedings were held or by the chairman of the next succeeding meeting, will be evidence of the proceedings (bb).

The Court will very rarely if ever restrain a company from holding a meeting, however useless it may be, as the company has a right to discuss what it pleases (c). Where the wrong complained of is one done to the company, and not to an individual shareholder, the Court will not interfere at the suit of any shareholder, whether suing on behalf of himself and all other shareholders, or on his own behalf alone, if a majority of the company assembled in general meeting could ratify it. The only exception to this rule would seem to be where the majority of the company are using their powers to benefit themselves at the expense of the minority or to defraud the minority.

Thus, in the leading case on the subject, Foss v. Harbottle (d), the plaintiff charged the directors with defrauding the company, but could not show that he had taken any steps to ascertain the views of the company on the matter, and this was held to be fatal to his claim. Again, the Court has declined to interfere where the company has omitted to appoint new directors, the power of appointment being in the company in general meeting (e) and where the company in general meeting had confirmed the act complained of and no question of fraud was fairly raised, although it was suggested (f). Again, an injunction was refused, where the chairman refused to grant a poll, it being under the circumstances of the case perfectly competent for the plaintiff to summon a fresh meeting and to put the matter complained of right in that way (g), and, in another case, the Court declined to grant an injunction restraining a company from extending its business in a way authorised by its memorandum of association (h). Further, the Court will not allow an action by one member of a company to set aside a contract which the company was fraudulently induced to enter into, if the company is willing to be made plaintiff (i), it will be otherwise if the company declines to bring the action because the persons who were guilty of the fraud hold or control a majority of votes (k), and the Court will restrain a majority from entering into an arrangement for a sale to another company, where such sale will in effect put the assets of the vendor company or a substantial part of them into the pockets of the majority, at the expense of the minority (l).

(a) This seems in accordance with the practice; see Wall v. London and Northern Assets, [1898] 2 Ch. 469; Thomson v. Henderson's Transvaal Estates, [1908] 1 Ch. 765, in both of which the point arose, but was not argued.

(c) Mason v. Motor Traction Co. [1905] 1 Ch. 419; Isle of Wight Railway Co. v. Tahourdin (1883), 25 C. D. 320. The Court will grant an injunction to restrain a company from acting on a resolution which has been invalidly passed as an extraordinary resolution, and which it is proposed to confirm as a special resolution: Young v. South African and Australian Exploration and Development, [1896] 2 Ch. 268.

The Court has allowed a suit by a single shareholder to set aside an agreement with a company (m), where the name of the company has in a previous action (n) been struck out at the direction of a majority of the company, such majority including the persons who had sold to the company.

In Burland v. Earle (o) although the company was not plaintiff, and no relief was given on other heads of claim (p), a director was ordered to repay overpayments made to himself under the mistaken belief that the payments were authorized by a resolution of the company. In this case the director in question held at the time of the suit an absolute majority of the shares; but the case is somewhat difficult to distinguish from Normandy v. Ind, Coope & Co. (q).

Again, an individual member suing on behalf of himself and others may restrain directors, who have a preponderating number of votes, from abusing their powers (r).

In these cases it is not necessary to show that the company has actually declined to take proceedings, it will be enough to show that the delinquents have such a number of votes that it would be useless to convene a meeting or that the company has so lain by after knowing of a fraud on it, as to make it extremely improbable that it will take proceedings (s).

These remarks do not apply to cases where a company is acting beyond the powers conferred on it by its memorandum or articles of association (t), nor do they apply to the case where the rights of property of any given shareholder are being ignored (u); in all these cases an individual shareholder may bring an action either in his own name where the act complained of is ultra vires of the company (x), or in other cases in his own name and that of all shareholders of the defendant company other than those who are made defendants; in such actions discovery can be had against the company (y), but the plaintiff must be a person who has not precluded himself by his acquiescence from bringing the action (z), at all events, where he is complaining of an act that has been done and is not seeking to prevent something being done (a).

It would seem that only the directors or the company in general meeting can authorize the name of the company being used in any proceedings (b); where the company's name is used without authority the name of the company will be struck out and the solicitor appearing for it will be ordered to pay the costs of the company whether plaintiff (c) or defendant (d) as between solicitor and client and that of the other party to the action as between party and party; where

THE A.B. COMPANY LIMITED.

Notice is hereby given that an Extraordinary General Meeting of the above-named Company will be held at on day the day of 19 at o'clock in the noon for the purpose of considering and if thought fit of passing the following resolution as an Extraordinary resolution that is to say :—

THAT subject to the provisions and restrictions in section 91 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908 contained interest at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum be paid on the amount for the time being paid up on the 10,000 Ordinary Shares of the company which were issued for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the construction of the works of the company at and that the interest so paid may be charged to capital as part of the cost of construction of the said works.

(i) An extraordinary resolution will only be necessary in this case where (as under Article 41 of Table A) the articles require it.

Should the above resolution be passed as an extraordinary resolution, it will be submitted for confirmation as a special resolution at a meeting to be subsequently convened (k).

By Order of the Board,
X.Y.
Secretary.

FORM OF NOTICE OF EXTRAORDINARY GENERAL MEETING TO CONFIRM A RESOLUTION AS A SPECIAL RESOLUTION ALREADY PASSED AS AN EXTRAORDINARY RESOLUTION FOR A SUBDIVISION OF SHARES.

THE A.B. COMPANY LIMITED.

Notice is hereby given that an Extraordinary General Meeting of the above-named Company will be held at on day the day of 19 at o'clock in the noon for the purpose of considering and if thought fit confirming as a special resolution the following resolution which was passed as an Extraordinary Resolution at an Extraordinary General Meeting of the Company held on the day of 19 that is to say :—

That each of the £1 shares in the capital of the Company be subdivided into 2 shares of 10*s*. each.

By Order of the Board (l),
X.Y.
Secretary.

OTHER FORMS OF RESOLUTIONS.

ALTERATION OF ARTICLES.

"That Articles of Association in the form of a draft set of Articles of Association which has for the purpose of identification been signed by A. B. a solicitor of the Supreme Court be substituted for the existing Articles of Association of the Company."

Where the new articles of association do more than bring the old ones up to date, it is desirable to accompany this notice by a circular (m) which may, with the alterations necessary to meet the case, be in the following form :—

(k) Or where the articles allow of two meetings being called by one notice "to be held at the above address at o'clock in the noon on day the day of 19 ," even where the articles do not allow of this it is thought that the notice might validly give notice that the second resolution will be held at a meeting to be held on a future date, unless notice to the contrary is given: see supra, pp. 384 and 385.

(l) These words must, of course, be omitted where the meeting is summoned by requisitionists under s. 66. In spite of the doubt expressed in State of Wyoming Syndicate, [1901] 2 Ch. 431, it is thought that the notice may be signed by the secretary; it need not be signed by the requisitionists.

(m) Normandy v. Ind, Coope & Co., [1908] 1 Ch. 84.

THE A. B. COMPANY LIMITED.

The new Articles of Association which it is proposed that the Company shall adopt contain the following provisions, amongst others, which are different from those of the existing Articles of Association of the Company.

1. THEY give the Company power to pay a commission of 20 per cent. instead of 10 per cent. to any person in consideration of his subscribing or agreeing to subscribe whether absolutely or conditionally for any shares of the Company, and procuring or agreeing to procure subscriptions whether absolute or conditional for any shares in the Company.

2. THEY extend the lien, which the Company has at present over partly paid shares only, to all shares.

3. THEY enable the directors to refuse to register transfers of shares and persons claiming shares by transmission, in cases where the shares are fully paid, and not only as under the existing articles where they are partly paid.

4. THEY increase the maximum number of Directors from 4 to 6.

5. THEY increase the remuneration of each Director from £100 per annum to a remuneration calculated at the rate of £200 per annum.

The new Articles are intended also to bring the Articles of Association of the Company up to date ; a copy of them can be seen at the registered office of the Company and at the offices of Messrs.   Solicitors to the Company No.   Street E.C. during business hours at any time before the confirmatory meeting (n).

RESERVE CAPITAL.

That the sum of £   per share, being part of the capital of the Company which has not been already called up, shall not be capable of being called up except in the event and for the purposes of a winding-up.

CONVERSION OF PRIVATE INTO PUBLIC COMPANY: SECTION 121 (2).

That this Company do turn itself into a public Company.

[Here will follow any change of articles that may be required.]

CONSOLIDATION OF SHARE CAPITAL.

That each of the following sets of five shares of £1 each, namely the shares numbered 1 to 5 both inclusive the shares numbered 16 to 20 both inclusive the shares numbered 30, 31, 43, 99, and 105 in the Capital of the (n) Where there is not a circular, the notice itself should state where the new articles can be seen, unless they are sent round with the notice. In some cases instead of a circular it may be desirable to send round a copy of the new articles, with the material alterations marked, say, in red ink.

Company and each consecutive set of five shares of £1 each of the shares numbered from 201 to 300 both inclusive in the capital of the Company be consolidated and subdivided into shares of £5 each.

CONVERSION OF FULLY PAID-UP SHARES INTO STOCK.

THAT the shares numbered   to   both inclusive be converted into stock.

RECONVERSION OF STOCK INTO FULLY PAID SHARES.

THAT the sum of £   stock of the Company now standing in the name of A. B. be reconverted into fully paid shares of £   each (o).

INSPECTION.

The Board of Trade (p) may appoint one or more competent inspectors to investigate the affairs of any company and to report thereon in such manner as the board direct :—

(i) In the case of a banking company having a share capital, on the application of members holding not less than one-third of the shares issued ;

(ii) In the case of any other company having a share capital, on the application of members holding not less than one-tenth of the shares issued ;

(iii) In the case of a company not having a share capital, on the application of not less than one-fifth in number of the persons on the company's register of members.

The application must be supported by such evidence as the Board of Trade may require for the purpose of showing that the applicants have good reason for, and are not actuated by malicious motives in requiring the investigation ; and the Board of Trade may, before appointing an inspector, require the applicants to give security for payment of the costs of the inquiry.

It is the duty of all officers and agents of the company to produce to the inspectors all books and documents in their custody or power.

An inspector may examine on oath the officers (q) and agents of the company in relation to its business, and may administer an oath accordingly.

If any officer or agent refuses to produce any book or document which under the section it is his duty to produce, or to answer any question relating to the affairs of the company, he will be liable to a fine not exceeding five pounds in respect of each offence.

On the conclusion of the investigation the inspectors must report their opinion to the Board of Trade, and a copy of the report must be forwarded by the Board of Trade to the registered office of the company, and a further copy must, at the request of the applicants for the inspection, be delivered to them. The report will be written or printed as the Board direct.

All expenses of and incidental to the investigation must be

(p) A writ of prohibition will not lie against the Board of Trade or an inspector appointed by it under the provisions as the inspection is not a judicial matter, but only a scheme for obtaining information, and the report is only evidence of the opinion of the inspectors: Grosvenor v. West-end Railway (1897), 76 L. T. 337.

defrayed by the applicants, unless the Board of Trade direct the same to be paid by the company, which the Board of Trade is authorized to do (r). Where an application is made under these provisions the Board of Trade always require a statutory declaration showing that the applicants have good reason for and are not actuated by malicious motives in requiring such investigation. The applicants are also required to make a deposit varying according to the amount the investigation is likely to cost.

A company may by special resolution appoint inspectors to investigate its affairs.

Inspectors so appointed have the same powers and duties as inspectors appointed by the Board of Trade, except that, instead of reporting to the Board of Trade, they must report in such manner and to such persons as the company in general meeting may direct.

Officers and agents of the company incur the like penalties in case of refusal to produce any book or document required to be produced to inspectors so appointed, or to answer any question, as they would have incurred if the inspectors had been appointed by the Board of Trade (s).

A copy of the report of any inspectors appointed under the Act, authenticated by the seal of the company whose affairs they have investigated will be admissible in any legal proceeding as evidence of the opinion of the inspectors in relation to any matter contained in the report (t).

AUDITORS.

Every company must at each annual general meeting appoint an auditor or auditors to hold office until the next annual general meeting.

If an appointment of auditors is not made at an annual general meeting, the Board of Trade may on the application of any member of the company, appoint an auditor of the company for the current year, and fix the remuneration to be paid him by the company for his services (x). A director or officer of the company is not capable of being appointed auditor of a company.

A person, other than a retiring auditor, is not capable of being appointed auditor at an annual general meeting unless notice of an

(x) Where the non-appointment of auditors arises from some slip the old auditors will usually be reappointed. In other cases the Board of Trade will appoint some auditor of standing. The remuneration usually paid by the company to its auditors will no doubt be some guide to the Board of Trade in fixing the remuneration of an auditor, but as they necessarily appoint a person of standing a larger fee may be necessary.

intention to nominate that person to the office of auditor has been given by a shareholder to the company not less than fourteen days before the annual general meeting, and the company must send a copy of any such notice to the retiring auditor, and give notice thereof to the shareholders, either by advertisement or in any other mode allowed by the articles, not less than seven days before the annual general meeting; but if, after a notice of the intention to nominate an auditor has been so given, an annual general meeting is called for a date fourteen days or less after that notice has been given, the notice, though not given within the time required by this provision will be deemed to have been properly given for the purposes thereof, and the notice to be sent or given by the company may, instead of being sent or given within the time required by this provision, be sent or given at the same time as the notice of the annual general meeting.

The first auditors of the company may be appointed by the directors before the statutory meeting, and if so appointed will hold office until the first annual general meeting, unless previously removed by a resolution of the shareholders in general meeting, in which case the shareholders at such meeting may appoint auditors.

The directors of a company may fill any casual vacancy in the office of auditor, but while any such vacancy continues the surviving or continuing auditor or auditors, if any, may act.

The remuneration of the auditors of a company must be fixed by the company in general meeting, except that the remuneration of any auditors appointed before the statutory meeting, or to fill any casual vacancy, may be fixed by the directors (y).

Every auditor of the company has a right of access at all times to the books and accounts and vouchers of the company, and is entitled to require from the directors and officers of the company such information and explanation as may be necessary for the performance of the duties of the auditors.

The auditors must make a report to the shareholders on the accounts examined by them, and on every balance sheet laid before the company in general meeting during their tenure of office, and the report must state :—

(a) Whether or not they have obtained all the information and explanations they have required; and

(y) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 112. It will be noticed that neither the directors nor the company are expressly empowered by the section to appoint auditors between the statutory meeting and the first annual general meeting. It is thought that the effect of this section is to prevent auditors recovering any remuneration fixed otherwise than in the way provided by the section: see Page v. Eastern and Midlands Railway (1884)), 1 Cab. & E. 280, a case decided under s. 91 of the Companies Clauses Act, 1845.

(b) Whether, in their opinion, the balance sheet referred to in the report is properly drawn up so as to exhibit a true and correct view of the state of the company's affairs according to the best of their information and the explanations given to them, and as shown by the books of the company.

The balance sheet must be signed on behalf of the board by two of the directors of the company, or, if there is only one director, by that director, and the auditors' report must be attached to the balance sheet, or there must be inserted at the foot of the balance sheet a reference to the report, and the report must be read before the company in general meeting, and be open to inspection by any shareholder. Any shareholder is entitled to be furnished with a copy of the balance sheet and auditors' report at a charge not exceeding sixpence for every hundred words.

If any copy of a balance sheet is issued, circulated, or published without being signed as required by this provision, or without having a copy of the auditors' report attached thereto or containing such reference to that report as is required by the section, the company, and every director, manager, secretary, or other officer of the company who is knowingly a party to the default, will on conviction be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds (z).

(b) the balance sheet must be signed by the secretary or manager (if any), and where there are more than three directors by at least three of those directors and where there are not more than three directors by all the directors (a).

Holders of preference shares and debentures of a company have the same right to receive and inspect the balance sheets of the company and the reports of the auditors and other reports as is possessed by the holders of ordinary shares in the company, except in the case of private companies, or companies registered before the 1st of July, 1908 (b).

(a) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 113.

(b) Ibid., s. 114.

Where the accounts of an assurance company to which the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, applies, are not subject to audit in accordance with the provisions of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, or the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, relating to audit, the accounts of the company are to be audited annually in such manner as the Board of Trade prescribes, and the regulations made for the purpose may apply to any such company the provisions of the Companies Consolidation Act, 1908, relating to audit, subject to such adaptations and modifications as may appear necessary or expedient (c).

Under the power conferred by this provision the following rules have been made :—

The accounts of every assurance company not subject to audit in accordance with the provisions of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, or of the Companies Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, relating to audit shall be audited in accordance with the provisions of section 113 (1) and (2) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (d).

No director or officer of the company shall be capable of being appointed an auditor.

Section 113 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, impliedly requires an annual balance sheet and audit (f), and the Act also imposes other duties on auditors. They must audit that part of the summary which the company, if not a private company, is required to make in the form of a balance sheet containing a summary of its share capital, its liabilities, and its assets (g). If auditors have been appointed before the statutory meeting they must certify the correctness of the statutory report so far as it relates to the shares allotted by the company, and to the cash received in respect of such shares and the receipts and payments on capital account (h).

Auditors appointed under the above provisions have a primâ facie right to rely on their appointment, and if they are improperly dismissed will be entitled to bring an action ; but the Court will not force their services on the company, particularly where proceedings against them are threatened, and there is a possibility of their using their position to obtain discovery in such proceedings. If the auditors have been dismissed by the directors, the Court will usually direct a meeting of the company to ascertain its wishes. Where an auditor is excluded, he will not be liable for the non-performance of his statutory duties (hh).

Not infrequently the articles contain directions with reference to the duties of the auditors ; and in such case the auditors are bound to comply with such requirements (i). The first question that arises in considering the duties of auditors is as to the extent to which they are bound to go behind the books of the company. It will be seen that auditors in their report have to say whether the balance sheet shows a true and correct view of the company's affairs, according not only to the books of the company, but also according to the best of their information and the explanations given to them (k). These latter words were first introduced by the Companies Act, 1907, but they do not seem to alter the law as previously laid down to any considerable extent. It is not the duty of auditors to consider whether the business of the company is, or is not, being prudently carried on: they have simply to ascertain the true financial position of the company at the time of the audit (l). To do this they are not bound to go through every document and paper of the company; they may, for instance, take a few vouchers at haphazard, and if these are in order they may assume that the other vouchers are in like case (m); or again, they may rely on the certificate of the managing director as to the value of the stock which the company has in hand (n). It has been stated that it is the duty of an auditor to examine the register of members, and that a proper certificate cannot be given unless this is done (o).

If an auditor does come across any suspicious circumstance, then it is his duty to probe the matter to the bottom, and if such inquiry does not do away with his suspicions, he must report to the shareholders; except in very rare cases, it will be necessary to report suspicious facts to the shareholders, and it will not be sufficient to indicate to them a source from which they can get the requisite information (p). Thus, if auditors find that without any apparent reason the stock of the company, or any other asset, has become very largely inflated in value from one year to another, that is a matter for inquiry, and, if necessary, for them to report on; and the same remark would probably be true where assets of a wasting character or book debts of long standing stand from year to year at the original value placed on them; again, if the company is applying its moneys in a manner which is ultra vires, e.g. in the purchase of its own shares, the auditors should report on that. In a proper case the auditors of a company can call in an expert on any particular subject to assist them in their labours (q).

A company cannot have a secret reserve fund, and keep the particulars of such fund from its auditors. But previously to the Act of 1907, it was held that if a company had such a fund, and its auditors were satisfied with what was being done with it, it would be enough for the balance sheet to indicate that there were other undisclosed assets; but that if they were dissatisfied with the state of such fund, e.g. if it was invested in partly paid shares which might expose the company to serious liability, they must disclose the fact to the shareholders (r). If this decision was ever law (rr), it is not thought that it can be so regarded (in the case of companies other than private companies) now, for the statement in the form of a balance sheet (s) which such companies have to make under section 26 (3) of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, must contain a summary of the company's share capital and of its liabilities and assets, giving such particulars as will disclose the general nature of those liabilities and assets, and how the value of the fixed assets have been arrived at (t). The form of balance sheet to be laid before the company in general meeting is a question of very great importance, having regard to the law that limited companies cannot pay dividends out of capital.

According to the authorities, it may be right either (a) to have a balance sheet containing on the liability side all liabilities of the company, including the amounts paid up on the shares of the company, and on the other side all assets of the company, the balance (if any) on one side or the other, being credited or debited to profit and loss (u); or (b) to treat the balance sheet and profit and loss account as entirely separate, in which latter case the balance sheet will contain all capital liabilities of the company, including the amounts paid up on the shares of the company, and also all capital assets of the company, and the profit and loss account will contain, on the one side, all current expenses of the company, and on the other, all current earnings of the company (x).

The proper course to be adopted being dependent, apart from (t) The question of the value to be put on fixed assets is apparently a purely domestic question, and so to be decided by the company alone: cp. Spanish Prospecting Co., [1911] 1 Ch. 92; see also Young v. Brownlee & Co., [1911] S. any special provisions in the articles, on the nature of the business of the company, and on what is usual or the reverse in businesses of a similar nature; if the latter form is adopted there would appear to be no obligation on the company to set aside a reserve fund, even when the property of the company is of a wasting nature (y), and the question of what is to be charged to capital and what to profit and loss is generally speaking dependent on the same considerations as are applicable to the determination of the form of balance sheet to be adopted (z).

It would seem, however, that if there is to be any force in the rule that dividends cannot be paid out of capital, there must be some payments which must be charged to profit and loss, even though an ordinary honest trader might see fit to charge them to capital. Thus, debts which are payable only out of profits would not be chargeable to capital (a), and it would seem that remuneration to directors, even where it is for special services rendered, must be charged to profit and loss, and that an article providing to the contrary will be bad (b).

A more difficult question arises with regard to interest on sums borrowed (c) or raised for purposes of construction—can a company treat moneys so paid for interest during the period of construction as a charge upon capital? It would appear clear (d) that moneys raised by the issue of shares for construction purposes are not available for the payment of interest on such shares or on any other shares, except in cases where the provisions of section 91 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, or of the Indian Railways Acts, apply; but it is argued that moneys borrowed are not in any sense capital, that the buildings or works when completed represent not only the moneys expended on them, but also any interest that has been paid to raise such moneys, and that under these circumstances, if it can be shown to be usual for individual traders to charge such moneys to capital there is no reason why a limited company should not do so. This line of argument proved successful in Bardwell v. Sheffield Waterworks (e), a case not decided under the Companies Acts, in which interest on moneys raised by the issue of shares was allowed to be charged to capital, and also in Hinds v. Buenos Ayres Grand National Tramways (f); it was treated as a very difficult question, but not decided on the appeal, in Bloxam v. Metropolitan Railway (g), but in the court below in that case it was considered to be wrong; and it was treated very summarily in Alexandra Palace Co. (h), where Fry, J., considered that such an argument could not be considered for a moment, as it was based entirely on paper transactions, which had no existence in sober fact.

It is submitted (i) that the view taken in this last cited case is the preferable one, for if it is right in the case of borrowed capital to treat the works constructed with such capital as representing alike the capital and interest charged on them, why should not such treatment be right in the case of moneys raised by the issue of shares? In either case the works constructed would be of precisely the same value, and to hold that they cannot be so treated in one case without so holding in the other, would seem to be paying attention to the words, rather than to the spirit, of the rule that dividends cannot be paid out of capital. If such interest is properly a charge on profit and loss it clearly cannot be charged to capital on the ground that the matter is one of internal management only, for it is obvious that to do this would be to increase the fund available for distribution (k).

Accretions to capital can, it is thought, unless the articles otherwise provide, always be credited to profit and loss (l); but before distributing accretions it will be necessary to ascertain that there has really been an increase in the value of the capital assets as a whole—the mere fact that one or two of those assets have increased in value will not justify such a course (m).

If sums properly payable out of capital have been paid out of profit and loss, such sums can subsequently be repaid to profit and loss (n).

It is thought that premiums obtained on the issue of shares at a premium are capital moneys (o); but moneys paid by way of interest for the delay of a contractor would seem rightly to be credited to profit and loss (p). A company can split an extraordinary expenditure which occurs in any given year, and which is properly chargeable to profit and loss, so as to distribute it over two or three years (q).

Interest payable under section 91 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, or under the Indian Railways Acts, may be charged to capital (r).

Where any commission has been paid in respect of any shares or debentures, or any sum has been allowed by way of discount in respect of any debentures, the total amount so paid or allowed, or so much thereof as has not been written off, must be stated in every balance sheet of the company, until the whole amount thereof has been written off (s).

Where a balance sheet has been fairly and honestly made out, the court will be very slow to interfere, or to say that it is not a proper balance sheet (t).

Auditors are expected to display reasonable care and skill, and if they act honestly they will, it would seem, only be liable if they display gross negligence, or are grossly incompetent (u), and but for such negligence or incompetence would have sent in a different report or would have cautioned their clients as to the affairs of the company (x). They must remember above all things that they are the servants of the company (y) and not of the directors, and that if they feel doubt or difficulty on any point, and such doubt or difficulty is not removed by any explanation that is vouchsafed to them, it is their duty to report on the point to the shareholders, a report of the directors will not be sufficient. Moreover, it will be the wildest folly on their part if they withdrew anything contained in a report they have made merely to please the directors; probably, the very few cases in which auditors have been held liable have turned mainly on their having proved too obliging in this respect (z).

The Statute of Limitations will protect auditors after six years (a).

It has been laid down in Scotland that an auditor will be entitled to retain any papers handed to him for the purpose of performing his duties until his fees are paid, but that he has no general lien (b).

If any auditor in any return, report, certificate, balance sheet, or other document required by or for the purposes of sections 26, 65, 112 or 113 of the Act, makes a statement false in any material particular knowing it to be false, he will be guilty of a misdemeanour, and will be liable on conviction on indictment to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and on summary conviction to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four months, with or without hard labour, and in either case to a fine in lieu of or in addition to each imprisonment; the fine on summary conviction must not exceed £100 (c).

Misfeasance proceedings can usually be taken against auditors under section 215 of the Act, as they are in most cases officers of a company (d), and are liable where, as a direct consequence of a breach of duty on their part, the funds of the company have been misapplied (e).

ASSURANCE COMPANIES.

The Assurance Companies Act, 1909, contains special provisions for companies which are assurance companies within the meaning of that Act (ee).

Every assurance company must, at the expiration of each financial year of the company, prepare—

(a) A revenue account for the year in the form or forms set forth in the First Schedule to the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, and applicable to the class or classes of assurance business carried on by the company;

(b) A profit and loss account in the form set forth in the Second Schedule to such Act, except where the company carries on assurance business of one class only and no other business;

(c) A balance sheet in the form set forth in the Third Schedule to such Act (f).

With the exceptions mentioned below, every assurance company must, once in every five years, or at shorter intervals as may be prescribed by the instrument constituting the company, or by its regulations or byelaws, cause an investigation to be made into its financial condition, including a valuation of its liabilities by an actuary, and must cause an abstract of the report of such actuary to be made in the form or forms set forth in the Fourth Schedule to the Act and applicable to the class or classes of assurance business carried on by the company.

The last foregoing provisions also apply whenever at any other time an investigation into the financial condition of an assurance company is made with a view to the distribution of profits, or the results of which are made public (g).

The exception with regard to the business of life assurance is that in the case of a mutual company whose profits are allocated to members wholly or mainly by annual abatements of premium, the abstract of the report of the actuary on the financial condition of the company, prepared in accordance with the Fourth Schedule to this Act, may, notwithstanding anything in section five of the Act, be made and returned at intervals not exceeding five years, provided that, where such return is not made annually, it must include particulars as to the rates of abatement of premiums applicable to different classes or series of assurances allowed in each year during the period which has elapsed since the previous return under the Fourth Schedule (h).

A fire insurance company need not with respect to that business prepare a statement in accordance with the Fourth and Fifth Schedules to the Act (i).

The section (5) does not apply to either accident insurance companies or employers' liability insurance companies in respect of their business, but the following provisions are substituted for the provisions of sections 5 and 6 (see infra) of the Act, for these companies, so far as such businesses are concerned—that is to say—with regard to accident insurance companies.

The company must annually prepare a statement of its accident insurance business in the form set forth in the Fourth Schedule to this Act and applicable to accident insurance business, and the statement must be printed, signed, and deposited at the Board of Trade in accordance with section 7 of the Act (k):

With regard to employers' liability companies a company must annually prepare a statement of its employers' liability insurance business in the form set forth in the Fourth Schedule to this Act and applicable to employers' liability insurance business, and must cause an investigation of its estimated liabilities to be made by an actuary so far as may be necessary to enable the provisions of that form to be complied with, and the statement must be printed, signed, and deposited at the Board of Trade in accordance with section 7 of the Act (l).

The expression actuary in the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, means an actuary possessing such qualifications as may be prescribed by rules made by the Board of Trade (m).

Such rules have been made and are as follows :—

1. Any person signing as actuary valuation returns of life assurance business, sinking fund or capital redemption insurance business, or bond investment business shall be either—

(1) a Fellow of the Institute of Actuaries or of the Faculty of Actuaries ; or

(2) where application is made by a company and where, in the opinion of the Board of Trade, special circumstances exist, an Associate of the Institute of Actuaries or of the Faculty of Actuaries ; or

(3) the actuary at the date of making these Rules to a company under the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, having its head office within the United Kingdom or to any closed fund of such a company established in consequence of an amalgamation or transfer ; or

(4) such other person having actuarial knowledge as the Board of Trade may, on the application of a company, approve.

2. Any person signing as actuary returns with regard to employers' liability business shall be either—

(1) a Fellow or Associate of the Institute of Actuaries or of the Faculty of Actuaries ; or

(2) the actuary at the date of making these Rules to a company under the said Act having its head office within the United Kingdom or to any closed fund of such a company established in consequence of an amalgamation or transfer ; or

(3) such other person as the Board of Trade may, on the application of a company, approve (n).

Every assurance company carrying on life assurance or bond investment business must prepare a statement of any assurance business it has of either of these kinds at the date to which the accounts of the company are made up for the purposes of any investigation into its financial condition with a view to the distribution of profits or the results of which are made public in the form or forms set forth in the Fifth Schedule to the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, and applicable to the class or classes of assurance business carried on by the company : Provided that, if the investigation is made annually by any company, the company may prepare such a statement at any time, so that it be made at least once in every five years (o).

Every account, balance sheet, abstract, or statement by the preceding sections of the Act required to be made must in the case, of all assurance companies to which the Act applies, be printed and four copies thereof, one of which must be signed by the chairman (p) and two directors of the company and by the principal officer of the company and, if the company has a managing director, by the managing director, must be deposited at the Board of Trade within six months after the close of the period to which the account, balance sheet, abstract, or statement relates: but, if in any case it is made to appear to the Board of Trade that the circumstances are such that a longer period than six months should be allowed, the Board may extend that period by such period not exceeding three months as they think fit.

The Board of Trade must consider the accounts, balance sheets, abstracts, and statements so deposited, and, if any such account, balance sheet, abstract, or statement appears to the Board to be inaccurate or incomplete in any respect, the Board must communicate with the company with a view to the correction of any such inaccuracies and the supply of deficiencies.

There must be deposited with every revenue account and balance sheet of a company any report on the affairs of the company submitted to the shareholders or policy-holders (q) of the company in respect of the financial year (r) to which the account and balance sheet relates.

Where an assurance company registered under the Companies Acts in any year deposits its accounts and balance sheet in accordance with these provisions, the company may, at the same time, send to the Registrar a copy of such accounts and balance sheet; and, where such copy is so sent, it is not necessary for the company to send to the Registrar a statement in the form of a balance sheet as required by sub-section (3) of section 26 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, and the copy of the accounts and balance

(p) "Chairman" means the person for the time being presiding over the board of directors or other governing body of the company: ibid., s. 29.

(q) "Policy-holder" means the person who for the time being is the legal holder of the policy for securing the contract with the company: ibid., s. 29. It includes an annuitant in the case of a life assurance company: ibid., s. 30 (b); and in the case of a bond investment company it means the person who is for the time being the legal holder of a policy, which includes any bond, certificate, receipt, or other instrument evidencing the contract with the company: ibid., s. 34 (a).

(r) "Financial year" means each period of twelve months at the end of which the balance of the accounts is struck or if no such balance is struck then the calendar year: ibid., s. 29.

sheet so sent will be dealt with in all respects as if it were a statement sent in accordance with that sub-section (s). The first statement of the bond investment business of a company had to be deposited at the Board of Trade on or before the 30th June, 1911 (t).

A printed copy of the last-deposited accounts, balance sheet, abstract, or statement, must on the application of any shareholder or policy holder of the company be forwarded to him by the company by post or otherwise (u).

The Board of Trade may direct any documents deposited with them under the Act, or certified copies thereof to be kept by the Registrar of joint stock companies, and any such documents and copies will be open to inspection, and copies thereof may be procured by any person on payment of such fees as the Board of Trade may direct (x).

By the order of the Board of Trade of June 6, 1910, rules relating to the custody, inspection, and certification of documents, it is provided that a copy of every account, balance sheet, abstract, statement, or report, required by the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, to be deposited with the Board of Trade shall be kept by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, and shall be open to inspection by any person on payment of a fee of 1*s*. for each inspection, and any person may procure a copy of any such document or any part thereof on payment of 4*d*. a folio of 72 words.

Every document deposited under the Act with the Board of Trade, and certified by the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies, or by any person appointed in that behalf by the President of the Board of Trade to be a document so deposited, will be deemed to be a document so deposited.

Every document purporting to be certified by such Registrar, or by any person appointed in that behalf by the President of the Board of Trade, to be a copy of a document so deposited will be deemed to be a copy of that document, and will be received in evidence as if it were the original document, unless some variation between it and the original document be proved (y). The assistant Registrars have been appointed in addition to the Registrar for the purpose of certifying documents under this section (z).

The Board of Trade may, on the application or with the consent of an assurance company, alter the forms contained in the schedules to the Assurance Companies Act, 1909, as respects that company, for the purpose of adapting them to the circumstances of that company (a).

The Board of Trade must lay annually before Parliament the accounts, balance sheets, abstracts, statements, and other documents under the Assurance Companies Act, or purporting to be under that Act, deposited with them during the preceding year, except reports on the affairs of assurance companies submitted to the shareholders or policy-holders thereof, and may append to such accounts, balance sheets, abstracts, statements, or other documents any note of the Board thereon, and any correspondence in relation thereto (b).

ORDER AS TO DISTRIBUTION OF PROFITS ON ACTION BY DEBENTURE-HOLDERS, WITH CHARGE ON PROFITS ONLY.

(Title.)

UPON motion for an injunction this day made unto the Court by counsel for the plaintiffs and upon reading the writ of summons issued in this action on the 21st December 1909 an affidavit of the plaintiff J.A.H. filed the 11th January 1910 and the several exhibits therein referred to and an affidavit of F.L.L. filed the 7th January 1910 and the plaintiffs and the defendant company by their counsel consenting to the hearing of the said motion being treated as the trial of the action,

This Court doth declare that upon the true construction of the trust deed in the said writ mentioned the defendant company is entitled to set aside a proper sum in each year out of profits for renewals and maintenance of the security comprised in the said deed but is not entitled to carry forward any balance of such profits to the revenue account of the following year but is bound to apply the same in or towards payment of interest on the 5 p.c. debenture stock issued by the defendant company and doth declare that the reserve fund of £ must be taken to have been set aside in equal moieties out of the profits carried forward from previous years and out of the profits of the current year, and that the balance of such last mentioned profits ought now to be paid to the plaintiffs. * Life companies having separate annuity fund to show amount thereof separately. † These items are or have been included in the corresponding items in the First Schedule.

NOTE 1.—When part of the assets of the company are specifically deposited, under local laws, in various places out of the United Kingdom, as security to holders of policies there issued, each such place and the amount compulsorily lodged therein must be specified in respect of each class of business, except that, in the case of fire, accident, or employers' liability insurance business, it shall be sufficient to state the fact that a part of the assets has been so deposited.

NOTE 2.—A Balance Sheet in the above form must be rendered in respect of each separate fund for which separate investments are made.

NOTE 3.—The Balance Sheet must state how the values of the Stock Exchange securities are arrived at, and a certificate must be appended, signed by the same persons as sign the Balance Sheet, to the effect that in their belief the assets set forth in the Balance Sheet are in the aggregate fully of the value stated therein, less any investment reserve fund taken into account. In the case of a company transacting life assurance business or bond investment business, this certificate is to be given on the occasions only when a statement respecting valuation under the Fourth Schedule is made.

NOTE 4.—In the case of a company required to keep separate funds under section 3 of this Act, a certificate must be appended, signed by the same persons as signed the Balance Sheet and by the auditor, to the effect that no part of any such fund has been applied, directly or indirectly, for any purpose other than the class of business to which it is applicable.

FOURTH SCHEDULE. (See section 5 of the Act, supra, pp. 414 and 415.)

N.B.—Where sinking fund or capital redemption insurance business is carried on, a separate statement signed by the actuary must be furnished, showing the total number of policies valued, the total sums assured, and the total office yearly premiums, and also showing the total net liability in respect of such business and the basis on which such liability is calculated.

(A.)—Form applicable to Life Assurance Business.

STATEMENT respecting the VALUATION of the LIABILITIES under LIFE POLICIES and ANNUITIES of the , to be made and signed by the ACTUARY.

1. The date up to which the valuation is made.

2. The general principles adopted in the valuation, and the method followed in the valuation of particular classes of assurances, including a statement of the method by which the net premiums have been arrived at, and whether these principles were determined by the instrument constituting the company, or by its regulations or byelaws, or how otherwise; together with a statement of the manner in which policies on under average lives are dealt with.

3. The table or tables of mortality used in the valuation. In cases where the tables employed are not published, specimen policy values are to be given, at the rate of interest employed in the valuation, in respect of whole-life assurance policies effected at the respective ages of 20, 30, 40, and 50, and having been respectively in force for five years, ten years, and upwards at intervals of five years respectively; with similar specimen policy values in respect of endowment assurance policies, according to age at entry, original term of policy, and duration.

4. The rate or rates of interest assumed in the calculations.

5. The actual proportion of the annual premium income, if any, reserved as a provision for future expenses and profits, separately specified in respect of assurances with immediate profits, with deferred profits, and without profits. (If none, state how this provision is made.)

6. The consolidated revenue account since the last valuation, or, in case of a company which has made no valuation, since the commencement of the business. (This return should be made in the form annexed. No return under this heading will be required where a statement under this schedule is deposited annually.)

7. The liabilities of the company under life policies and annuities at the date of the valuation, showing the number of policies, the amount assured, and the amount of premiums payable annually under each class of policies, both with and without participation in profits; and also the net liabilities and assets of the company, with the amount of surplus or deficiency. (These returns to be made in the forms annexed.)

8. The principles upon which the distribution of profits among the shareholders and policy holders is made, and whether these principles were determined by the instrument constituting the company or by its regulations or byelaws or how otherwise, and the number of years' premiums to be paid before a bonus (a) is allotted, and (b) vests.

9. The results of the valuation, showing—

(1) The total amount of profit made by the company, allocated as follows :—

(a) Among the policy holders with immediate participation, and the number and amount of the policies which participated ;

(b) Among policy holders with deferred participation, and the number and amount of the policies which participated ;

(c) Among the shareholders ;

(d) To reserve funds, or other accounts ;

(e) Carried forward unappropriated.

(2) Specimens of bonuses allotted to whole-life assurance policies for £100 effected at the respective ages of 20, 30, 40, and 50, and having been respectively in force for five years, ten years, and upwards at intervals of five years respectively, together with the amounts apportioned under the various modes in which the bonus might be received ; with similar specimen bonuses and particulars in respect of endowment assurance policies, according to age at entry, original term of policy, and duration.

Note.—Separate statements to be furnished throughout in respect of Ordinary and Industrial business respectively, the basis of the division being stated.

NOTE.—In cases where the date at which the estimated liability, required under column (2), in Forms IV., V., and VI. above, would fall in any year prior to 1908, such estimated liability is to be returned as at the end of the year of account terminated in 1908, and the claims paid, required under column (3) of such forms, are to be in respect of the period between the end of the year of account terminated in 1908 and the end of the year of account rendered.

VII.—Statement respecting Claims of five years' duration and upwards outstanding as at the end of the year of account. (To be made and signed by an Actuary.)

(1) The number of claims incumbent and having durations of five years and upwards as at the end of the year of account, including those separately returned under Form VI. above; and the amount of the weekly payment, and of the annual payment, due in respect of such claims; separately stated in respect of each year of life of the workmen, from the youngest to the oldest. (These particulars to be returned under columns (1) to (4) of the tabular statement given below.)

(2) The estimated liability in respect of the claims specified above, computed, as at the end of the year of account, on the basis of the amount which would be required to purchase from the National Debt Commissioners, through the Post Office Savings Bank, an immediate life annuity for the workmen equal to 75 per cent. of the value of the weekly payment, according to the sex and true age of the workers. (These particulars to be returned under column (5) of the tabular statement given below, in respect of each year of life of the workmen, from the youngest to the oldest.)

required under Headings (1) and (2) above are to be returned in columns (1) to (5) of the tabular statement given below, together with the following additional particulars :—

(i) If the estimated liability is determined on the basis of the value of an immediate life annuity :—

(a) The table of mortality upon which such life annuity values are based ;

(b) The rate of interest at which such life annuity values are computed ;

(c) Whether such life annuity values are discriminated according to the sex of the workers ;

(d) The proportion of such life annuity values representing the estimated liability ;

(e) The modifications (if any) made in the true ages of the workmen, in deducing the estimated liability ;

(f) The amount of the estimated liability. (To be returned, in respect of each year of life, in column (6) of the tabular statement given below.)

(ii) If the estimated liability is not determined on the basis of the value of an immediate life annuity, full particulars are to be specified as to the precise method adopted in deducing such estimated liability, and the total amount of estimated liability is to be returned under column (6) of the tabular statement given below.

Number of Claims. (1)	Ages of the Workmen as at the end of the Year of Account. (2)	Amount of Weekly Payment. (3)	Amount of Annual Payment. (4)	Estimated Liability computed on Basis of 75 per Cent. of Value of Life Annuity purchased through the Post Office. (5)	Estimated Liability, if computed on Basis other than that specified in Column 5. (6)

(The answers should be numbered to accord with the numbers of the corresponding questions.)

1. The date up to which the valuation is made.

2. The principles adopted in the valuation of the liabilities under bond investment policies and endowment certificates, and whether these principles were determined by the instrument constituting the company, or by its regulations or byelaws, or how otherwise.

3. The rate or rates of interest assumed in the calculations.

4. The actual proportion of the annual income from contributions, if any, reserved as a provision for future expenses and profits. (If none, state how this provision is made.)

5. The consolidated revenue account since the last valuation, or, in the case of a company which has made no valuation, since the commencement of the business. (This return should be made in the form annexed. No return under this heading will be required where the valuation is made annually.)

6. The liabilities of the company under bond investment policies and endowment certificates at the date of the valuation, showing the number of policies or certificates, the amounts assured, the amount of contribution payable annually, and the provision for future expenses and profits; also the net liabilities and assets of the company, with the amount of surplus or deficiency. (These returns should be made in the forms annexed.)

7. The principles upon which the distribution of profits among the bond and certificate holders and shareholders is made, and whether those principles are determined by the instrument constituting the company, or by its regulations or byelaws, or how otherwise, and the time during which a bond investment policy or endowment certificate must be in force to entitle it to share in the profits.

8. The results of the valuation, showing—

(1) The total amount of profit made by the company, allocated as follows:—

(a) among participating bond or certificate holders, with the number so participating and the total amount of their bonds or certificates;

(b) among the shareholders;

(c) to reserve funds, or other accounts;

(d) carried forward unappropriated.

(2) Specimens of profit allotted to policies or certificates for £100 effected for different periods, and having been in force for different durations.

FIFTH SCHEDULE. (See section 6 of the Act, supra, pp. 416 and 417.)

N.B.—Where sinking fund or capital redemption business is carried on, a separate statement, signed by the actuary, must be furnished showing the total sums assured maturing in each calendar year and the corresponding office premiums.

(A.)—Form applicable to Life Assurance Business.

STATEMENT of the LIFE ASSURANCE and ANNUITY BUSINESS of the on the 19 , to be signed by the Actuary.

(The answers should be numbered to accord with the numbers of the corresponding questions. Statements of re-assurances corresponding to the statements in respect of assurances are to be given throughout.) Separate statements are to be furnished in the replies to all the headings under this schedule for business at other than European rates. Separate statements are to be also furnished throughout in respect of ordinary and industrial business respectively.

1. The published table or tables of premiums for assurances for the whole term of life and for endowment assurances which are in use at the date above mentioned.

2. The total amount assured on lives for the whole term of life which are in existence at the date above-mentioned, distinguishing the portions assured with immediate profits, with deferred profits, and without profits, stating separately the total reversionary bonuses and specifying the sums assured for each year of life from the youngest to the oldest ages, the basis of division as to immediate and deferred profits being stated.

3. The amount of premiums receivable annually for each year of life, after deducting the abatements made by the application of bonuses, in respect of the respective assurances mentioned under Heading No. 2, distinguishing ordinary from extra premiums. A separate statement is to be given of premiums payable for a limited number of years, classified according to the number of years' payments remaining to be made.

4. The total amount assured under endowment assurances, specifying sums assured and office premiums separately in respect of each year in which such assurances will mature for payment. The reversionary bonuses must also be separately specified, and the sums assured with immediate profits, with deferred profits, and without profits, separately returned.

5. The total amount assured under classes of assurance business, other than assurances dealt with under Questions 2 and 4, distinguishing the sums assured under each class, and stating separately the amount assured with immediate profits, with deferred profits, and without profits, and the total amount of reversionary bonuses.

6. The amount of premiums receivable annually in respect of each such special class of assurances mentioned under Heading No. 5, distinguishing ordinary from extra premiums.

7. The total amount of premiums which has been received from the commencement upon pure endowment policies which are in force at the date above mentioned.

8. The total amount of immediate annuities on lives, distinguishing the amounts for each year of life, and distinguishing male and female lives.

9. The amount of all annuities on lives other than those specified under Heading No. 8, distinguishing the amount of annuities payable under each class, and the amount of premiums annually receivable.

10. The average rate of interest yielded by the assets, whether invested or uninvested, constituting the life assurance fund of the company, calculated upon the mean fund of each year during the period since the last investigation, without deduction of income tax.

It must be stated whether or not the mean fund upon which the average rate of interest is calculated includes reversionary investments.

11. A table of minimum values, if any, allowed for the surrender of policies for the whole term of life and for endowments and endowment assurances, or a statement of the method pursued in calculating such surrender values, with instances of the application of such method to policies of different standing and taken out at various interval ages from the youngest to the oldest. In the case of industrial policies, where free or paid up policies are granted in lieu of surrender values, the conditions under which such policies are granted must be stated, with specimens as prescribed for surrender values.

(E.)—Form applicable to Bond Investment Business.

STATEMENT of the BOND INVESTMENT BUSINESS of the

(The answers should be numbered to accord with the numbers of the corresponding questions. Statements of re-insurances, corresponding to the statements in respect of insurances, are throughout to be given.)

1. The published table or tables of rates of contribution for bond investment policies and endowment certificates which are in use at the date above-mentioned; with full particulars as to the terms and conditions on which advances are made under such policies or certificates, whether on security of house property or land, or otherwise.

2. The total amounts assured under policies or certificates which are in existence at the date above-mentioned, distinguishing the portions insured with and without profits, stating separately the total additions by way of bonus, and specifying such sums insured and bonuses respectively according to the number of complete years unexpired at such date.

3. The amount of premiums receivable annually, in respect of the respective insurances mentioned under Heading No. 2, separately specified according to the number of complete years unexpired at the date above mentioned.

4. The total amount of premiums which have been received from the commencement upon all policies or certificates mentioned under Headings Nos. 2 and 3, separately specified according to the number of complete years unexpired at the date above mentioned.

5. The average rate of interest realized by the assets, whether invested or uninvested, constituting the bond investment and endowment certificate fund of the company, calculated upon the mean fund of each year during the period since the last investigation, without deduction of income tax.

6. Full particulars as to the terms and conditions upon which surrenders of policies and certificates are granted, with specimens of the values allowed in respect of different durations, and different unexpired terms at the date of surrender.

7. Full particulars as to the terms and conditions upon which allowances are made on the death of a policy or certificate holder, with specimen values as required under Heading No. 6.

8. Full particulars as to the terms and conditions upon which transfers of the interest in a policy or certificate are granted, whether on the death of the policy or certificate holder, or during his lifetime.

9. Full particulars as to the terms and conditions upon which redemption of advances is granted, with specimens of redemption values in respect of bonds or certificates of different durations, and having different unexpired terms, at the date of redemption.

10. A tabular statement in respect of policies or certificates lapsed during the period since the last investigation, showing the number, the amount insured, the yearly premiums, and the total premiums received from the commencement; classified according to the year in which such policies or certificates were effected, and lapsed, respectively; with a similar tabular statement in respect of policies or certificates surrendered during the period: Provided that policies or certificates which have lapsed and been revived shall not be entered as lapses.

11. A statement of the total number of advances made under policies or certificates to the holders thereof, whether on the security of house property or land or otherwise, and the total amount of such advances outstanding at the date above mentioned, distinguishing the advances on first mortgage and those on second or subsequent mortgage.

CHAPTER VII.

DEBENTURES.

BORROWING POWERS OF A COMPANY (a).

A TRADING company may, unless prohibited by its memorandum or articles of association, borrow money (b); and this rule extends to the great bulk of companies formed under the Companies Act, 1862, or the present Act (c). The right to borrow money carries with it the right to give security for the money so borrowed, unless the company is forbidden to do so by its memorandum or articles of association (d). Borrowing powers are, however, usually given either by the company's memorandum or by its articles of association, and as such power is not a matter which the Act requires to be in the memorandum, the articles may be looked at for the purpose of explaining a power given by the memorandum; but in case of conflict it has been held that the provisions of the memorandum will prevail (e). In one case an Irish Court suggested that though a company might have a power of borrowing for the purposes of its business, it could not do so for the purpose of raising capital to acquire such business (f); the author knows of no authority for this distinction. In construing powers of borrowing and giving security, the question often arises what can the company charge, and in particular can it charge its uncalled capital? It is well settled that a power to charge uncalled capital conferred by the memorandum or articles of association of a company is good (g); but a power to charge "the property" of a company (h) or its "property both present and future" (i), or "its property and effects" (k), or "its estate" (l), will not in the absence of a sufficient context authorize a charge on capital which is not called up while the company is a going concern, but such words will authorize a charge on capital not called up at the date of charge, but called up before the company goes into liquidation (m). On the other hand, a power to charge "the assets" (n) or "the rights" (o) of a company, or to borrow "upon any security of the company, or upon the security of any property of the company" (p), or "upon the property and effects of the company, or in such other manner as the company may determine" (q), are sufficient to charge all uncalled capital, except capital which, under the provisions of section 5 of the Companies Act, 1879, or section 58 or 59 of the existing Act, can only be called up for the purpose of a winding up, or the amount guaranteed by members of a company limited by guarantee, which can in no case be charged by the company (r). The question remains whether a company which has no express power of giving security, can under its implied power of giving security charge its uncalled capital ?—there are dicta in one case (s) that it cannot do so. Stanley's Case (t) and the other cases which followed it were decided upon the construction of the powers of charging in each case (u), and as those powers did not authorize a charge of uncalled capital, they impliedly forbade such a charge; these cases therefore are not opposed to the view that a company may have implied power to charge its uncalled capital, and it is difficult to see why such a power should not be implied (x).

In the construction of charging powers it is often necessary to ascertain what exactly is meant by borrowing or lending money or similar words. A power to borrow and give security for the money borrowed authorizes the giving of security for existing debts of the company (y), or of another person (z), if the company is liable to such other person for such debt, or for a guarantee which has been given to secure a debt of the company: but it does not, it would seem, authorize a company to give security for a guarantee given to carriers with a view to obtaining their services on credit (a); it would seem that a power to borrow and secure the repayment of the money borrowed will authorize the issue of debentures at a discount (b). An overdraft at a bank is a borrowing (c); a power to charge the property of the company will apparently enable a charge on future property to be given (d); and a power "to issue" debentures, etc., conferred by the memorandum may, if there are wider words in the articles, authorize a verbal charge on uncalled capital (e).

If a company has power to issue debentures, whether such power be express or implied, there is no reason why such debentures should not be issued to its principal shareholder, or given to the vendor as the consideration for the sale, for the company is an entirely separate entity from its shareholders or vendors (even when the latter retain the bulk of the shares) (f).

It must, however, be remembered that in a winding up a floating charge on the undertaking or property (g) of the company created

(x) The reasoning of JESSEL, M.R., in Colonial Trusts Corporation (1879), 15 C. D. 465, which proceeds on the basis that capital called up in a winding-up is not assets of the company at all, but arises under a distinct liability is opposed to this view, and does not seem consistent with Pyle Works (1890), 44 C. D. 534.

(f) Salomon v. Salomon, [1897] A. C. 22; and see Re Slobodinsky, [1903] 2 K. B. 517.

within three months of the commencement of the winding-up will, unless it is proved that the company immediately after the creation of the charge was solvent, be invalid except to the amount of any cash paid (h) to the company at the time of, or subsequently to, the creation of, and in consideration for, the charge, together with interest on that amount at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum (i). The fixed assets of a company will not be taken into account in ascertaining whether the company was or was not solvent at the date of giving a charge (ii).

A power to borrow does not authorize a joint borrowing by the company and other persons, but where a company has entered into such a transaction, it will be liable and any charge given by it will be good to the extent to which such company has received the proceeds of such joint borrowing (k). Usually a person who lends money to a company, which has power to borrow for the purposes of its business, is not bound to see that the money lent is wanted for a proper or intra vires purpose, and unless he has at the time of lending the money knowledge that the money is going to be applied for an improper or ultra vires purpose, his security will not be affected by the fact that the money is so applied (l); but where a company carries on an ultra vires business, which is in no way ancillary to its proper business, there a person who has advanced money to the company in the course of carrying on its ultra vires business, will, if he wishes to rank as a creditor, have to show that the money was used in the company's proper business (ll). If the lender be a company, the company will not be fixed with notice because one of its officers who is also an officer of the borrowing company knows the facts, unless such officer owes a duty to the borrowing company to give notice of such facts, and to the lending company to receive such notice (m). Even if the officer does owe such duties it would seem that to a charge on uncalled capital, see the cases on construction of powers to charge, supra, p. 446. If this is the right view it would seem a debenture-holder could pay himself, the amount allowed by the section out of the undertaking and property of the company, and could then look to its unpaid capital for the balance. In s. 186 of the Act, however, the word "property" has been held to include uncalled capital: see Webb v. Whiffin (1872), L. R. 5 H. L. 711, and it seems probable that it will be held to do so under this section.

(h) Spargo's Case (1873), 8 Ch. 407, and the cases following it as to what will amount to a payment in cash for shares, do not apply in construing this section: Orleans Motor Car Co., [1911] 2 Ch. 41.

(i) Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 212. The question whether money is or is not paid "at the time of the creation of the charge" is in all cases a question of fact and payments made in consideration of the security and in anticipation of its creation, and in reliance on a promise to execute it, will be protected by the later words of the section as being paid "at the time of the creation of the charge": Columbian Fireproofing Co., [1910] 2 Ch. 120; cp. also Orleans Motor Car Co., [1911] 2 Ch. 41, where the charge was held to be bad, as it was given for moneys paid in satisfaction of a guarantee previously given.

the lending company will not be fixed with notice if the officer has an interest to conceal, and does conceal, the true facts (n).

A person lending money to a company on mortgage is bound to ascertain that the company has power to borrow and give security; and for this purpose he must look at the company's memorandum and articles of association. In other words, he takes with notice of the contents of these documents, which are public documents and accessible to the public (o). Thus, if the memorandum or articles of association of a company provide that the company, or its directors, shall not borrow beyond a certain amount, persons negotiating with the company (p) or (as the case may be) with its directors (q) with a view to lending money, are bound to see that the limit has not been exceeded. Again, where powers are given to the company or its directors, the lenders are bound to see that they do not deal with any other person, even if he does purport to have authority to act (r).

But if the company, or its directors, or any other person with whom the lender deals, would have authority under the company's memorandum and articles to act in a particular way, if certain preliminaries had been gone through, the lender may assume that those preliminaries have been gone through, unless he has notice that this is not so (s). company can, in the absence of notice of any defect in their appointment, treat them in the same way in all respects as if they were de jure directors (t), and a document which requires to be signed by a certain number of directors will, at all events where the requisite number of directors exist, bind the company if signed by that number of de facto directors (u). Where the articles require a certain minimum number of directors, and also provide that the continuing directors may act notwithstanding any vacancy, directors, either de jure or de facto, may act, though there are not the minimum number of directors, at all events, in cases where there are enough directors to form any quorum required by the articles for directors' meetings (x). Probably, in cases where directors have power to delegate to a managing director or to any one of their number, an act done by a managing director or, as the case may be, by one director would, if good on the face of it, bind the company even where such managing director or director was the only director and the articles required several directors, and a quorum of more than one, and made no provision for continuing directors acting, in dealings with a person who had no knowledge of these defects (y).

This view is borne out by sections 71 and 74 of the Act. The former section requires minutes of all proceedings of directors or managers to be entered in books kept for that purpose, and provides that any such minute, if purporting to be signed by the chairman of the meeting at which the proceedings were had, or by the chairman of the next succeeding meeting, is to be evidence of the proceedings, and that until the contrary is proved every such meeting in respect of the proceedings of which minutes have been so made, is to be deemed to have been duly had and convened, and all proceedings at such meeting to have been duly had. The latter section provides that the acts of a director or manager are to be valid in spite of any defect that may afterwards be discovered in his appointment or qualification. A person dealing with a company may, under this section, treat the acts of de facto directors as valid until he has notice of the fact that they are only de facto directors (z). If a company which has exhausted its borrowing powers does in fact borrow further money, the lender will be entitled to repayment of such part of such money as has been applied in paying the lawful debts of the company (a), whether such debts existed at the time of the loan or were incurred subsequently to it (b)—the test in each case being whether the company has substantially increased its debt by the unauthorized borrowing (c); the lender may retain any security given him for moneys so borrowed and applied (d), but he is not entitled to the benefit of any securities held by a creditor of the company who has been paid off out of his money (e). It is necessary in these cases to show an actual payment of the debts and a mere adjustment of the accounts will not be enough (f). A creditor who has lent money to a company in excess of its borrowing powers cannot repay himself such moneys out of other moneys of the company which have come into his hands (g), though if he can identify the money lent he can recover it (gg). Possibly where all the members of the borrowing company have been paid 20*s.* in the £, any surplus will be divisible among the ultra vires lenders rateably (ggg). A loan made to a third party at the request of the company does not, even if applied in payment of the debts of the company, give any right against the company in cases where it has exceeded its borrowing powers (h). A person who has lent money to a company which has no power to borrow such money is a creditor neither at law nor in equity, he cannot maintain an action for money had and received (gg), and it is doubtful whether the company can so alter its regulations as to affirm the transaction (hh).

Where a company or its directors are authorized to borrow to the extent of its capital not called up, the expression "capital not called up" includes unissued shares (i). A power to borrow any sum not exceeding the amount of the preference share capital of the company will not limit the powers of borrowing of the company or its directors, until preference shares have actually been issued (k). Debentures, etc., issued after the borrowing powers of a company have been exhausted are void and not merely voidable (l). Directors who issue debentures after the company has exhausted its borrowing powers, will be liable to an action for breach of warranty of authority, the measure of damages being the loss the person to whom such debentures were issued has suffered (m); but this rule does not apply where directors with power to issue debentures, agree to issue them but fail to do so (n).

The Bills of Sale Acts, like the Deeds of Arrangement Act (o), do not apply to mortgages issued by a company whether such mortgages take the form of debentures (p) or of a trust deed for securing debentures or debenture stock (q), or it would seem any other form, for the Act contains its own provisions as to registration.

The mortgages issued by a company very commonly take the form of either debentures or debenture stock. A debenture is an instrument under seal. It may be either a simple acknowledgment of a debt or a covenant to pay a certain sum, or such an acknowledgment or covenant coupled with a charge on all or some part of the assets of the company (r). Usually a number of debentures are issued at the same or practically the same time, these will have priority according to the dates of their issue unless, as is practically always the case, they contain something to show a contrary intention (s) (as e.g. a condition that they are all to rank pari passu).

Debenture stock is borrowed money capitalized (t), and each lender of such money usually gets a certificate under the common seal of the company stating the amount of stock he is entitled to.

Debenture stock is almost always secured by a trust deed which is usually referred to in the stock certificates, and although what is called a floating charge is usually contained in debentures, a specific charge is very rarely contained in them, and a trust deed is often requisite for the purpose of giving the holders of the debentures a specific charge on part of the company's assets.

" A floating security is an equitable charge on the assets for the time being of a going concern. It attaches to the subject charged in the varying condition in which it happens to be from time to time. It is of the essence of such a charge that it remains dormant until the undertaking charged ceases to be a going concern, or until the person in whose favour the charge is created intervenes. His right to intervene may, of course, be suspended by agreement. But if there is no agreement for suspension he may exercise his right whenever he pleases after default" (u). The charge exists from the moment when the floating security comes into operation, and so debenture holders are necessary parties to a foreclosure action by a prior mortgagee (x), and they may apply to the Court for the appointment of a receiver even before the mortgage money is due (y); and debentures secured by a floating charge over land confer an interest in land within the meaning of section 4 of the Statute of Frauds (z). There are, however, dicta of all the law lords in De Beers Consolidated v. British South Africa Co. (zz), which point to the equitable doctrine against clogging the equity of redemption not being applicable to a floating charge. It follows from the very nature of a floating charge that the company can, notwithstanding its existence and until the charge attaches, carry on its business, and in the ordinary course of such business deal with its property (a).

Thus a company may, unless expressly forbidden by the instrument creating the charge, create specific mortgages ranking in priority to the floating charge (b), or assign a debt due to it as security for moneys owing by it (c); and it may pay debts due to its directors and consent to judgment in an action brought by them (d); and it may in some cases sell the whole of its assets, except certain specified securities, for shares in another company and preclude itself from carrying on the business which is, on the construction of its memorandum of association, its main object (e); and it may sell one out of three businesses carried on by it (f); but it may not by the sale of its business entirely preclude itself from carrying on all the business (g) which it was formed to carry on. The existence of debenture will not prevent a person who is indebted to the company setting off debts due to him from the company, if such debts are presently payable before steps are taken to enforce the security given by the debentures (h); and a landlord may validly distrain on property subject to debentures, secured by a floating charge which has not become fixed, for he is simply exercising a power given him by the company (i). A company can moreover assign all the debts to come from a specific source, and such assignment will be good against the debenture-holders (k), to the extent of all such debts which have actually been paid over or in respect of which remittances have been despatched by post before notice that the company has stopped business has been given to the debtor (l). A company may in spite of the issue of debentures pay money to a sheriff to induce him to go out of possession (m).

Not infrequently debentures provide that the company is not to be at liberty to create a mortgage or charge ranking pari passu with or in priority to the debentures; if the company commits a breach of such an obligation the mortgagee will, of course, if he takes with actual notice of the condition, rank after the holders of such debentures (n); but a mortgagee who only knows that debentures have been issued, and does not know whether they do or do not contain such a condition, will rank before the debentures (o), even if he has made no inquiry about the conditions (p), or if he is only entitled to a vendor's lien or has obtained a legal mortgage for securing such lien after notice of the existence of a floating charge, and its conditions (q); or if he is only an equitable mortgagee by deposit of title-deeds (r). Such a condition will not affect a solicitor's lien (s), or an interest which has priority to the company's own interest (ss).

Though a company may carry on its business in the ordinary way after the issue of debentures, a person levying execution on a company takes subject to the rights of the debenture-holders, at all events, where the sheriff has not sold (t), and according to the decision of Kekewich, J., in Taunton v. Sheriff of Warwickshire (u), where he has sold but not distributed the proceeds of sale; this rule will not, however, apparently apply where no receiver has been appointed (x). Where a receiver is appointed a person who has obtained a garnishee order, whether nisi (y) or absolute (z) against a debtor of the company, will obtain no title to the debt as against debenture-holders, even if the debentures have been issued after the order was made, and all parties knew of it (a). paid over to him, even after he knows of the debentures, he will not be liable to refund it (b), and the Court will not on the application of a debenture-holder whose money is due, but who has taken no step to enforce his rights except demanding payment refuse to make a garnishee order nisi absolute (c). Debenture-holders cannot gain priority, while their charge is a floating one, and the company is entitled to create prior charges, by giving notice to persons indebted to the company (d).

It follows from the very nature of a floating security that the security becomes fixed as, and from the date when the company ceases to carry on business, otherwise there would be outgoings continuing for the purposes of the winding-up, but no incomings; and the security of the debenture-holders would gradually disappear; and so, even though the debenture-holders may not be able to sue on their covenant, if the time for payment mentioned in the debentures has not arrived, they are entitled on the company stopping business to a declaration that they are entitled to a charge for the full amount of their debentures, with interest and to an account on that footing (e).

For this purpose a company ceases to carry on business at the commencement of a winding-up, even though it be a voluntary winding-up, or a winding-up subject to the supervision of the Court (f); on the appointment of a receiver and manager, or a receiver in a debenture-holder's action (g), but not on the issue of a writ in such an action (h); and the security will attach on the appointment of a receiver under a power in a debenture or debenture trust deed (i); and also if the company ceases (k), or agrees to cease to carry on business (l). Persons who are general creditors at the date when the charge attaches, will be postponed to the persons entitled to the charge (m). A debenture-holder cannot, however, seize part of the assets subject to his charge, he must determine the company's licence to carry on business altogether or not at all (n).

A contract with a company to take up and pay for debentures or debenture stock of a company may now be enforced by specific performance (o); where money has not been advanced a contract to issue debentures could not and, it is thought, cannot be enforced by specific performance (p). But where money has been advanced a contract to issue debentures might always be enforced by specific performance, and so agreements to issue debentures (q), or debentures issued in blank (r) or debentures secured by a trust deed which contained no description of the property charged (s), although not debentures at law, confer the same rights as the debentures would have done, if validly issued; but the contract must comply with the requirements of the Statute of Frauds (t). Such an agreement, if not followed by the issue of debentures requires registration under section 93 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (u). An agreement to issue debentures when called for does not create any charge, until the debentures have been called for (x).

An arrangement to issue a series of unregistered debentures on the terms that the debentures issued shall be withdrawn at the expiration of each 14 days, and fresh ones issued; and giving the debenture-holders the right to register on default is apparently a perfectly valid arrangement (y), but such an arrangement is now rendered difficult to carry out by the provisions of section 212 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (z). A company can issue debentures at a discount (a), and it can issue them as security for moneys advanced, such moneys not being the amount of the debt mentioned in the mortgage, in which cases the debentures are, as it were, mortgaged, and the holders of such debentures can prove pari passu with other debenture-holders of the same issue, but cannot receive more than the amount due to them for principal, interest and costs (b). Where the amount secured by debentures or debenture stock is payable by instalments, it has always been usual to provide that on non-payment of any instalment, the company may cancel the debentures and forfeit the instalments already paid; notwithstanding section 105 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, it still seems desirable to insert such a provision. If there be a winding-up petition pending before any such instalment becomes due and payable, the person liable may decline to pay further instalments, and will not by non-payment render his previous payments liable to forfeiture or impair the security he has for them (c).

With regard to a prospectus on the issue of debentures or debenture stock the provisions of the Act, which relate to a prospectus on the issue of shares, apply (d).

The stock exchange requirements for a prospectus in cases where an official quotation is desired have already been mentioned (dd).

Once the security has been issued, neither the prospectus nor the form of application may be looked at for the purpose of ascertaining the contract between the company and the person to whom the security is issued, though they may be taken into consideration where rectification is sought (e).

A company must within two months after the allotment of any debentures or debenture stock, and after the registration of a transfer of the same, have ready for delivery the debentures or debenture stock certificates unless the conditions of issue otherwise provide (f).

Where an official quotation on the Stock Exchange is required (ff), the trust deed must contain the following provisions: (1) Where provision is made that the security shall be repayable at a premium, either at a fixed date or at any time upon notice having been given, the trust deed must further provide that, should the company go into voluntary liquidation for the purpose of amalgamation or reconstruction, the security shall not be repayable at a lower price. (2) A clause providing that "the statutory power of appointing new trustees hereof shall be vested in the company, but a trustee so appointed must in the first place be approved by a resolution of the debenture (or debenture stock holders), passed in the manner specified in the schedule hereto. A corporation or a company may be appointed a trustee of those presents." (3) In the clause regulating the convening of meetings of the debenture (or debenture stock holders), the following words must be inserted: "and the trustee, or trustees, shall do so upon a requisition in writing signed by holders of at least one-tenth of the nominal amount of debentures (or debenture stock) for the time being outstanding." (4) The clause defining an "Extraordinary Resolution" must provide that "the expression "Extraordinary Resolution" means a resolution passed at a meeting of the debenture (or debenture stock) holders, duly convened and held, at which a clear majority in value of the whole of the debenture (or debenture stock) holders is present in person or by proxy, and carried by a majority consisting of not less than three-fourths of the persons voting thereat upon a show of hands, and if a poll is demanded then by a majority consisting of not less than three-fourths in value of the votes given on such poll (g). (5) If debentures or debenture stock are entitled "first mortgage" provision must be made for the creation of a specific first mortgage in favour of the debenture or debenture stock holders (gg).

FORM OF DEBENTURES AND DEBENTURE STOCK.

We have already dealt with the distinction between debentures which give a charge, and debentures which do not do so.

We now come to another sort of distinction, viz. the distinction between (a) registered debentures or debenture stock; and (b) debentures or debenture stock payable to bearer.

(a) In the case of registered debentures or debenture stock, the company keeps a register containing the names (and usually the addresses and descriptions) of the holders of the debentures or debenture stock, and the numbers of the debentures or the amount of the stock held by them.

tinues: ibid. The offence can be prosecuted under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts; in Scotland prosecutions must be at the instance of the Lord Advocate or a procurator fiscal as the Lord Advocate directs: ibid., s. 276.

(ff) See the Stock Exchange Rules and Appendices set out in the Appendix to this book, pp. 1508 et seq., as to the steps to be taken where a special settlement or official quotation is desired.

(g) In practice the Stock Exchange authorities will allow the form used in the debenture stock deed below set out, instead of this clause.

(gg) There must be a specific first mortgage on some part of the property comprised in the charge.

Every such register must except when closed in accordance with the articles of the company during such period or periods (not exceeding in the whole 30 days in any year) as is specified in the articles be open to the inspection of the registered holder of any such debentures or debenture stock, and of any holder of shares in the company, but subject to such reasonable restrictions as the company in general meeting may impose, so that at least two hours in each day are appointed for inspection; and every such holder may require a copy of such register or any part thereof on payment of 6*d.* for every 100 words required to be copied (h). A person demanding inspection cannot himself take copies (i).

The conditions endorsed on the debentures usually provide that the debentures shall be transferable by writing under the hand of the transferor or his legal personal representatives, and that on the transfer being left at the registered office of the company with the necessary evidence of identity and title, and on payment of a fee the transfer shall be registered.

Now debentures and interests in debentures are choses in action, and in the absence of any special condition the transferee of a chose in action takes it subject to the equities which affected it in the hands of his transferor.

Thus the company may raise against any such transferee any counter claim which arises out of and is inseparably connected with the dealings which gave rise to the original claim (k); and the transferee will have no higher rights than a predecessor in title who obtained the debentures from the company by fraud or misrepresentation (l), or for a consideration that has failed (m). Again the company may, where it is not inequitable for it to do so, set off against a transferee claims which it had against his transferor at the date when it received notice of the assignment to the transferee, and this will be so whether such claims are at such date due and payable, or merely due, but not presently payable (n); but the case is different where at the time of such notice being given there is merely an inchoate claim, which has not ripened into a debt, and which does not constitute a legal set-off (o). The bankruptcy doctrine of set-off, which is imported into the liquidation of companies by section 207 of the Act which replaces section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875 (p), only applies to cross claims existing at the date of winding-up (q). Where the company has gone into liquidation at the date of the transfer, there the transferee will, in the absence of a condition to the contrary, take only the rights of the person, who was entitled at the commencement of the winding up (r), for he cannot take out of a fund, without first putting into it what is due from him (s), and the rights of the parties would seem to be fixed at the time of the liquidation (t). This rule applies whether it operates for the benefit of the company or for the benefit of the debenture-holder (u).

The company may estop itself from taking the benefit of this rule or it may contract itself out of this rule either by the form of the debenture it gives or, as is usual nowadays, by inserting an express condition that the debenture shall be transferable free from equities.

Turning first to the cases where the company has been held to have estopped itself from setting up an equity there are (1) the cases where a company has given to the transferee a certificate stating that he is the proprietor of certain debentures (x). (2) The cases where the transferee has obtained a judgment against the company on the footing that he was entitled to the debentures free from equities, without the company having taken any steps to contest his title (y). (3) There are the cases where a company has issued debentures, for the purpose of enabling the person to whom they were issued to raise money on them (z), and he has done so. In all these cases the equity of the transferee has been held to prevail over that of the company, and the company has consequently not been allowed to set up its prior equity, and Malins, V.C., took the same view where the company had received notice of the assignment of a debenture (a), and even where it had received notice of the assignment of, and had registered another bond of the same issue as the bond in question (b). But it must be borne in mind that the debenture-holders of a company are not always bound by an estoppel that binds the company (c).

The form of debentures has been held to make them transferable free from equities: e.g. where they were payable to bearer (d), or to the holder for the time being (e), or to the order of a certain person (f), and this apart from any question of custom or of the law merchant. But if the debentures are payable to a person "or his assigns," or to a person or "his assigns or the holder for the time being of the debentures," in such cases it would appear that the assignee does not get a higher right than his assignor, for the word assigns always meant equitable assigns before the Judicature Act, 1873 (g), and as that Act only enables a chose in action to be assigned "subject to all equities which would have been entitled to priority over the right of the assignee" (h), if it had not been passed, it does not alter the position of an assignee on this point. Where a debenture is payable to a person or the registered holder for the time being of the debenture there it would appear that a person who is not the registered holder or even a person who is the registered holder gets no higher right than any other transferee of a chose in action; as this is usually not desired by the parties, and as they can unquestionably contract themselves out of the rule (i), it is usual to insert a condition providing that the principal moneys and interest secured by the debentures shall be paid to the registered holder thereof without regard to any equities existing between the company and any prior holder thereof. Under such a condition it would seem that a person who is registered even after winding-up as the holder of a debenture, and even a person to whom a transfer has been made after winding-up, and who is entitled to claim registration of such transfer is protected (k); but it may be that a transferee who at the date of winding-up was unregistered, will not be protected where the condition goes on to say that the receipt of the registered holder for such principal moneys or interest shall be a good discharge to the company (l). Having regard to conditions of this sort, it would seem to be usually desirable to have a condition enabling the company to refuse to register a transfer, if the transferor or any person through whom he claims otherwise than by transfer is indebted to the company (m). A registered holder of debentures will not under such a condition be protected from equities to which the holders of the other debentures of the same issue are entitled (n), nor will such a condition apparently protect a registered holder, who is not a bonâ fide purchaser for value, from claims which but for his registration could have been made against his transferor (o).

(b) Bearer Debentures and Debenture Stock.—These instruments are transferable by mere delivery and are now considered negotiable by the law merchant (p). It is not any longer necessary to bring evidence to prove that there is a custom to treat them as negotiable (q). These remarks would seem to apply not only where the debentures contain an express condition making them negotiable as was the case in Edelstein v. Schuler (r), but also where they do not, they would appear also to apply to scrip certificates to bearer (s), to debenture stock to bearer, and to coupons to bearer. Debentures to bearer sometimes contain conditions enabling the bearer of a debenture to register, and conditions to apply only when the debenture is registered, similar to those usually contained in a registered debenture. Bearer debentures, and sometimes also registered debentures, are accompanied by coupons for interest payable to bearer, and provide by their conditions that interest shall be payable at the time and place mentioned in such coupons.

(m) See the cases cited in the two preceding notes, as to the construction of the old common form conditions as to the transfer. They certainly do not appear to be reconcileable the one with the other. The Stock Exchange authorities do not, however, approve of a condition restricting the right to transfer unless it only applies to partly paid debentures.

Where an official quotation on the Stock Exchange is required the debentures should state on their face: (1) the authority under which the company is constituted; (2) the nominal capital of the company; (3) the dates when the interest on the debentures is payable (t); and the authority under which the issue is made (i.e. Articles of Association and resolutions), and on their back the conditions of issue, redemption and transfer (u). Each debenture is also usually numbered, and states the amount of the principal moneys thereby secured. The company then proceeds to covenant to pay usually in the case of registered debentures or debenture stock to a specified person (x), or other the registered holder, and in the case of bearer securities to the bearer, the principal sum thereby secured, either with or without a premium when the same shall become payable under the endorsed conditions, or as the case may be, on a specified day or on such earlier day when the principal moneys shall become payable in accordance with the endorsed conditions a covenant to pay without specifying a time for payment creates either a present liability to pay, or at least a liability to pay on demand. A covenant to pay on or before a certain day creates a liability to pay on the day named with an option of earlier payment, a covenant to pay on or after a certain day gives an option to pay on the day named, but no liability till after the day is passed and possibly not even then till demand is made, nor is the construction of a covenant in the last preceding form altered by a provision that the particular debentures to be paid off are to be determined by ballot, except that such a clause may give the mortgagor a right to repay before the day named (y). If a covenant to pay contains a proviso that the covenant shall only be enforced at the option of the covenantor, the proviso will be rejected as being repugnant (z). The second covenant on the face of the debenture is a covenant to pay interest at a certain rate on certain days (a). Such covenant should be to pay interest "until repayment" of the principal moneys (b). Where there are coupons for interest the covenant may refer to them. Clause 3, on the face of the debenture contains a floating charge (c), usually on the company's undertaking, and all its assets (d) whatsoever and wheresoever, including its uncalled capital for the time being, and then comes a clause incorporating or referring to the endorsed conditions; a clause referring to any trust deed there may be for further securing the debentures should be contained either on the face of the debentures or among the endorsed conditions, it is immaterial which.

Turning to the endorsed conditions, the first clause usually puts all the debentures of the issue on an equal footing (e), and provides, where that is the intention, that the company is not to be at liberty to create any mortgage or charge ranking pari passu with or in priority to the charge created by the debentures.

Condition 2 provides that the company is to keep a register of the debenture-holders or, where the debentures are to bearer and registration is optional, of the debenture-holders who wish to be

(c) As to the nature of a floating charge, supra, pp. 452 et seq. Where there is in addition a specific security, this should be given by a trust deed and not by the debentures; see Illingworth v. Houldsworth, [1902] A. C. 355 for cases where a security will be considered to be floating and not specific.

(d) The word "assets" will by itself (unlike the word property) charge the uncalled capital of the company; see Page v. International Agency and Industrial Trust (1893), 68 L. T. 435, and the cases cited supra, pp. 445 et seq., on the question whether a company has power to charge its uncalled capital. It will also presumably charge the goodwill of the company's business; Leas Hotel Co., [1902] 1 Ch. 332.

(e) In the absence of such a clause debentures will rank according to their date of issue; Gartside v. Silkstone, etc., Co. (1882), 21 C. D. 712; James v. Boythorpe Colliery Co. (1890), 2 Meg. 55, unless they contain some other indication of a contrary intention.

registered. It is unnecessary now to provide for inspection of such register as, as already stated, the Act gives a right to inspection. The next condition usually provides that the company shall not be bound to enter on its register notice of any trust (f), and that in the case of debentures which are registered, the company shall not be bound to recognize any one who is not the registered holder or his legal personal representative or the person entitled in his bankruptcy.

In the case of debentures to bearer, which can be, and have been, registered, there should be a right to demand cancellation of the registration. In the case of registered debentures the right to transfer and claim registration of the transfer should be provided for. In the case of registered debentures, which cannot be converted into debentures to bearer, it would seem better to restrict this right where the registered holder or persons through whom he claims otherwise than by purchase for value is indebted to the company; but where the registered debenture can be converted to a bearer debenture, it would seem unnecessary to do this, unless, indeed, the right to cancel registration is similarly restricted.

Then comes the usual, but it would seem somewhat unnecessary, clause, as to joint holders of debentures, to such a clause may be conveniently added provisions as to notices and payments to one of joint holders.

In the case of registered debentures there must in all cases be the clause above referred to, protecting the registered holders against equities which the company has against prior holders; but if there is a clause enabling persons entitled through the death or bankruptcy of a registered holder to be registered such persons should not be protected against any claims the company may have against the deceased or bankrupt person. In the cases of debentures to bearer it is usual, but probably unnecessary, to provide that they are to be negotiable.

A condition is usually inserted providing that the principal moneys and interest secured by the debentures shall be paid at the registered office of the company, $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ at some other place mentioned in the debenture, such a clause relieves the company from the obligation, under which it would otherwise be, of going and seeking out each debenture-holder, when moneys become payable to him. The company will, under such a condition, not be in default until a demand for payment has been made at the place or at one of the places specified in the condition (g). It is thought that it is better to enable the company to pay interest by sending a cheque (h) through the post, in the case of registered debentures which have not got coupons for interest attached. Where there are coupons the condition should provide that the interest shall be paid in accordance with the terms in the coupons, and each coupon should provide that it is to be surrendered on payment of the interest therein mentioned. It is as well also to provide that the principal moneys shall only be payable on surrender of the debenture with all coupons for interest not then due (i).

(f) Such a clause would seem not to enable a company to avoid receiving notice of a trust, see supra, p. 192. S. 27 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, of course does not apply to a register of debentures, the point was argued, but not decided on: Christie v. Taunton Delmard & Co., [1893] 2 Ch. 175, but it does enable the company to decline to enter any notice it has received on its register.

The next condition deals with the various events which will make the principal moneys secured by the debentures payable (k). These will be failure to pay interest for a certain time after it becomes payable or after it becomes payable and demand for payment has been made; the various events which would enable the debenture-holders to enforce their security, viz. winding-up execution or other process of any Court, the appointment of a receiver, and the company ceasing to carry on business, for though the debenture-holders would apart from such a clause be able to enforce their security in these events, they should be able, if they wish to do so, to sue on their covenant for payment, and claims for damages against the company on the footing that the debenture is irredeemable should be avoided (l). The principal moneys are also made payable on the breach of any covenant in the trust deed, if any (ll); and usually if a distress is levied against any of the property of the company (m).

J. (Q. B.) 14.

(h) But cp. Thairlwall v. Great Northern Railway, [1910] 2 K. B. 509. The mere holding over of a cheque for interest, or the indorsement of it by a trustee to his cestui que trust, will not amount to an agreement to give up the security and rely on the cheque: J. Defries and Sons, [1909] 2 Ch. 423; see also Henderson v. Arthur, [1907] 1 K. B. 10.

(i) Coupons for interest when not payable either to any named person or to bearer are simply tokens and part of the debentures and are consequently it would seem negotiable with the debenture, but not without it: Enthoven v. Hoyle (1853), 13 C. B. 373; Webb Hale & Co. v. Alexandra Water Co. (1905), 93 L. T. 339. From the evidence in the last case it would appear that a coupon to bearer would be negotiable even it if were only payable if the debenture were not sooner redeemed, without these words it would appear to be clearly negotiable; cp. Australasian Mortgage, etc., Co. v. Inland Revenue (1888), 16 Rettie 64, but it does seem desirable to add them.

(k) The principal moneys become immediately payable if the debenture becomes void for want of registration: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 93 (1).

Finally there are provisions as to notices, and such provisions should always be inserted as they may be useful, for example, on a reduction of capital.

Very frequently debentures, or the trust deed securing them, contain provisions enabling or requiring the company to redeem a certain number of debentures at certain times, and on giving certain notices (n). The particular debentures to be drawn being usually determined by drawings (o) in the presence of some approved person, usually a notary public, and of any debenture-holder who cares to attend. Sometimes a trust deed requires the company to set aside a sinking fund. It has been suggested that these drawings may, at all events in cases where the drawn debentures are to be redeemed at a premium, be illegal as contravening the provisions of the Lottery Acts. There would seem, however, to be nothing in the point (p), and the same remark applies to the redemption, by drawings, at par of debentures issued at a discount. A bond investment company may, however, not give the holder of any policy issued after the 3rd of December, 1909, any advantage dependent on lot or chance; this provision does not prejudice any question as to the application of the law relating to lotteries to such transactions, whether the policy was issued before or after that date (q).

With regard to debentures which a company has redeemed or bought on the market, formerly the law was that such debentures were cancelled or spent by the fact that the money secured by them was paid off, and they could not be reissued. The rule applied where the company had bought debentures in the market and had had them registered in its name (r); and where the debentures had been registered in the name of a person to whom they had been issued (n) As to the construction of such a condition and the notices to be given thereunder: First National Bank of Chicago v. Orinoco, etc., Co. (1905), 21 T. L. R. 39; Morrison v. Chicago, etc., Granaries, [1898] 1 Ch. 263. Where a Stock Exchange quotation is required then if the security is repayable at a premium either at a fixed date or upon notice being given, the trust deed must further provide that should the company go into voluntary liquidation for the purpose of amalgamation or reconstruction, the security shall not be repayable at a lower price. As to what is an amalgamation or reconstruction: South African Supply and Cold Storage Co., [1904] 2 Ch. 268.

T. 330 (where the headnote on the point seems to go too far), the point was apparently argued, but ultimately abandoned; and 29 W. R. 22; see also on the point, Sykes v. Beadon (1879)), 11 C. as collateral security, and had after the debt was paid off been transferred direct to bonâ fide purchasers for value from the company (s).

Similarly blank debentures which had been deposited as security for a loan, could not be reissued after the loan had been paid off (t); and debentures deposited as security for a particular loan could not be made security for a fresh loan, even though such fresh loan, had been contracted before the original loan was paid off (u).

This law was altered by section 15 of the Companies Act, 1907 (x). A company which has, either before or after the passing of the Act redeemed (y), any debentures previously issued has power, and is deemed always to have had power, to keep the debentures alive for the purposes of reissue; and where the company has purported to exercise such a power, it has power, and is deemed always to have had power to reissue the debentures either (a) by reissuing the same debentures; or (b) by issuing other debentures in their place. Where debentures have either before or after the passing of the Act been transferred to a nominee of the company with the object of keeping them alive for the purpose of reissue, a transfer from that nominee will be deemed to be a reissue for the purposes of the section (z).

These provisions do not apply where (a) the articles or the conditions of issue expressly otherwise provide or (b) where the debenture has been redeemed in pursuance of an obligation on the company so to do (not being an obligation (a) enforceable only by the person to whom the redeemed debentures were issued or his assigns) (b). The cases decided before the passing of the Companies Act, 1907, are important still in these two cases, and for stamping purposes.

Upon any such reissue the person entitled to the debentures will have, and is deemed always to have had the same rights and priorities as if the debentures had not been previously issued. The question whether such re-issued debentures require registration was raised in New London and Suburban Omnibus Co. (c), where Neville, J., did not decide the question, but held that in that particular case the debentures did not require registration.

The reissue of a debenture or the issue of another debenture under the powers conferred by the section, whether the re-issue or issue, was made before or after the passing of the Act is for the purposes of stamp duty, but not for the purposes of a provision limiting the amount or number of the debentures to be issued, to be treated as the issue of a new debenture.

A person lending money on the security of a debenture re-issued under the section, which appears to be duly stamped, may give the debenture in evidence in any proceedings for enforcing his security without payment of the stamp duty or any penalty, unless he had notice, or, but for his negligence might have discovered that the debenture was not duly stamped ; in any such case the company will be liable to pay the proper stamp duty and penalty (d).

The section does not prejudice (a) the operation of any judgment or order of a Court of competent jurisdiction pronounced or made before the 7th March, 1907, as between the parties to the proceedings in which the judgment was pronounced or the order made, and any appeal from any such judgment or order must be decided as if the Act had not been passed (e), or (b) any power to issue debentures (f) in the place of any debentures paid off or otherwise satisfied or extinguished, reserved to a company by its debentures or the securities for the same (g).

If there is no time specified for the repayment of the principal moneys secured, the principal money will be repayable on demand, unless the mortgage shows an intention to the contrary, but the mortgagee must give the mortgagor a reasonable time to find the money (h), and the same rule applies to the mortgagor's right to redeem where the mortgage is an equitable one, but in the case of a legal mortgage the mortgagor must give the mortgagee six months' notice, or pay him six months' interest in lieu of notice (i).

which may not happen for an indefinite period (k), or where the debenture or debenture stock is stated to be irredeemable, and there is no provision for redemption or covenant for repayment, there the debenture stock or debentures will be what is called perpetual or irredeemable, and the transaction will not be a borrowing of money or come within the provisions of a power to borrow, but will be a sale of a perpetual annuity (l).

Formerly there was doubt as to whether a company could create perpetual debentures or debenture stock, as it was said that such stock offended the rule against clogging the equity of redemption of mortgaged property (m); and it may be that in some cases such debentures or debenture stock would offend against the perpetuity rule (n). These doubts were removed by section 14 of the Companies Act, 1907 (o), which applies retrospectively, and a condition contained in any debentures (p), or in any deed for securing debentures, will, in spite of any equitable rule to the contrary not be invalid by reason only that it makes the debentures irredeemable or redeemable only on the happening of a contingency, however remote or on the expiration of a period however long. It will be noticed that this section does not affect cases like Jarrah Timber v. Samuel (q), where the question was not whether the company could validly issue the debenture stock, but whether it could give a mortgagee of such stock when issued an option to purchase the stock as part of the mortgage transaction; nor does the section touch the Southern Brazilian Rio Grande do Sul Railway (r), which turned on the construction of a memorandum of association which gave a power to borrow, but not to raise money; where perpetual debenture stock is secured by a floating security such security will become enforceable on the company being wound up (s), but unless the debenture stock is then payable the holder of such stock will have a claim for damages against the company, as it will have broken its covenant to pay him a perpetual annuity (l). Such claim will be enforceable in the winding-up.

It has been said (t) that the power of sale given by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, to mortgagees, does not extend to debenture-holders, and that they have consequently no implied power of sale. If this is so, debenture-holders have also no power of appointing a receiver under that Act, it is therefore not unusual to insert a clause in debentures, providing that a certain number of the debenture-holders shall have power to appoint a receiver, it will be as well to incorporate the provisions of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 ; but these provisions will not by themselves be enough, for it is desirable that the receiver should have power to carry on the business of the company to enter into possession, and to sell the property charged by the debentures (u) ; and he will also have to deal with capital, and not merely with income. It is important for such a power to expressly provide that the receiver shall be the agent of the company (x), otherwise he will be the agent of the debenture-holders (y), and they will be personally liable on his contracts ; if the receiver is the agent of the company neither he (z) nor the debenture-holders appointing him (a) will be personally liable on contracts entered into while the company is a going concern, and the persons appointing him will not be liable after a winding-up order has been made. Where the debentures are set aside under the Bankruptcy Acts of 13 Eliz. c. 5, the debenture-holders and any receiver appointed by them will be jointly and severally liable to account as trespassers for any property which has come to their hands (aa). The position of such a receiver after a winding-up order has been made raises a more difficult question, it would seem clear from Gosling v. Gaskell (b), that the receiver will cease to be the agent of the company ; and it would seem probable that he will be personally liable on contracts entered into after such an order ; but the question still remains whether he may carry on the business ? Appeal in Henry Pound, Son, and Hutchins (c) seems to be that a receiver could not do so, the view of Rigby, L.J., in Gaskell v. Gosling (d) seems to be that he could do so, and would be entitled to be indemnified out of the assets subject to the charge, but not out of any other assets of the company ; this latter view would seem to be preferable and more consistent with the principle that the rights of a mortgagee are altogether outside the winding-up (e). Where, as occasionally happens, the power to appoint a receiver is given to one of the debenture-holders, the power is a fiduciary one, and must be exercised in the interest of the debenture-holders as a whole, and not so as to favour the particular debenture-holder or the company (f), but in the absence of bad faith the Court will not appoint a receiver, where the debenture-holders have power to do so, and have exercised such power (g).

Usually a specified number of the debenture-holders are empowered to appoint a receiver at any time after the principal moneys become payable. It has been asserted that in a matter of this sort powers must be exercised or votes given with the view of benefiting the debenture-holders as a whole (h). There does not, however, seem to be any reason why powers or votes of this sort are not as much a right of property, as the votes given to shareholders ; but, of course, where some of the creditors of a particular class have interests which are opposed to the interests of other members of that class, the Court will take this fact into consideration, if, for any reason, its sanction to an appointment or a scheme is required (i).

The debenture will provide that the moneys received by the receiver shall be applied in the payment of the expenses incurred by him as receiver, including the payments which have priority under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, section 24, sub-sections (1), (2), and (3), viz. (1) rents, taxes, and outgoings affecting the mortgaged property ; (2) annual sums or other payments, and the interest on all principal sums having priority to the debentures ; (3) his commission (k), the premium on fire, life and other insurances

(if any) properly payable under the debentures or under the last-mentioned Act, and the cost of executing necessary and proper repairs directed in writing by the mortgagee (l).

Then will come the payments which have priority by virtue of section 107 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908 (m); for these expenses will, at all events, where the receiver has taken possession (n), and it is thought where he has not done so, have the same priority as in the case of a receiver appointed by the Court. The balance will be applied in paying the moneys secured by the debentures, and if anything remains after making these payments the company will be entitled to it. Primâ facie all payments to the debenture-holders will in the first instance be appropriated to interest (o); and only when all interest has been paid will moneys be applied in paying off capital. This is usually to the advantage of the debenture-holders, as interest will continue to run on capital, but not on interest unpaid; but where the security is insufficient, as the debenture-holders will not wish to pay income tax on interest received while their capital is unpaid, it is advantageous for them to receive payments on account of their capital in the first instance, in such a case if the security is being enforced by the Court it will order that any property distributed shall not be appropriated to capital or income or shall be applied in the first instance in paying off the capital (p), because it will assume that all the debenture-holders would elect to do what is most advantageous to them; but ordinarily such payments will be liable to adjustment, if there should ultimately prove to be sufficient funds (q).

Where a receiver is appointed under the powers in an instrument notice of the appointment must be given to the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies in the same way as where a receiver has been appointed by the Court (r).

Every receiver or manager of the property of a company who has been appointed under the powers contained in any instrument, and who has taken possession, must once in every half-year, while he remains in possession, and also on ceasing to act as receiver or

Presumably a receiver appointed by debenture-holders under a power would have the same powers as the Court has where it has appointed a receiver, though some may prefer to have a clause enabling him to make payments generally on account of principal and interest, until it is ascertained that the company has sufficient assets to make the other mode of distribution desirable.

manager, file with the Registrar of Joint Stock Companies an abstract in the prescribed form of his receipts and payments during the period to which the abstract relates, and must also on ceasing to act as receiver or manager file with the Registrar notice to that effect. The Registrar must enter such notice on the register of mortgages and charges. Every receiver or manager who makes default in complying with these provisions will be liable to a fine not exceeding £50 (s).

A difficulty sometimes arises on a sale of lands or letters patent, owing to the company having been dissolved before the legal estate has been got in by the mortgagees, or the purchasers from them, it is thought that if the dissolution of the company does not terminate its interest in the property, the Court can, without declaring the dissolution void (ss), appoint a new trustee under section 25 of the Trustee Act, 1893, on the ground that there is no existing trustee, and then make a vesting declaration under section 26 (1) of that Act (t). Moreover it can probably make a vesting declaration under section 26 (2) of the Trustee Act, 1893, on the ground that the trustee cannot be found (u).

But the question remains does the dissolution of the company terminate its rights in its property, e.g. in leaseholds or freeholds which it has not assigned. Apparently that is not the effect in the case of property which is held in trust for the company (x); but it has been held that a company's interest in leaseholds terminated with its dissolution (y), the decision being founded on passages in Blackstone, vol. i. p. 484.; Kyd on Corporations, vol. ii. p. 516; Grant on Corporations, p. 303; the reasoning being that it is an implied condition of every such grant, and that the grant being made to the corporation for beneficent purposes, when the corporation ceases the public spirit of the grantor is rewarded by the property reverting to him (z). It may perhaps be doubted whether such condition should be implied to a modern commercial corporation, where there is no beneficent purpose and therefore no public spirit to be rewarded (a).

FORM OF TRUST DEEDS.

We now come to the question of covering deeds or trust deeds for securing debentures or debenture stock (b). Debenture stock very rarely contains any charge in itself, and is therefore almost always secured by a trust deed. Debentures, although usually conferring a charge, are not infrequently accompanied by a trust deed, so that the debenture-holders may have the benefit of a fixed charge on certain of the property of the company (e.g. its freeholds and leaseholds) (aa). The covering deed will also usually confer a floating charge over the property not subject to the fixed charge, so as to enable the trustees to utilize all the property of the company in exercising their powers. The requirements of the Stock Exchange Committee where an official quotation is desired have already been mentioned (bb).

A covering deed is usually made between a company and the persons who are to act as trustees for the debenture or debenture stock holders, and the question arises how far can an individual debenture-holder or debenture stock holder enforce its provisions? There can be no doubt that a contract by A. with B. to pay C. a sum of money is not ordinarily enforceable by C. (c), and a contract by the company with trustees for debenture or debenture stock holders to pay such holders principal or interest is equally unenforceable (d); but a contract by A. with B. to deal with certain property in a certain way for the benefit of C., or to pay B. certain money for the benefit of C., or to pay C. money out of certain property would raise a trust on which C. would be entitled to sue (e), and consequently a debenture or debenture stock holder is entitled to enforce the provisions of the deed against the property subject to the trusts of the deed. In any case, if there is a covenant for payment with the debenture or debenture stock holder in his debenture or debenture stock certificate, he can sue on it (f).

(b) A copy of any trust deed for securing any issue of debentures or debenture stock must be forwarded to every holder of any such debentures or of any portion of such stock on payment in the case of a printed trust deed of one shilling or such less sum as may be prescribed by the company, or where the trust deed has not been printed, on payment of sixpence for every one hundred words required to be copied: Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, s. 102 (2). The penalty and the mode of proceeding for it is the same as in the case of a refusal to allow inspection of the register of debenture-holders: see supra, p. 460, note (h).

(aa) A fixed charge may be made to rank after a floating charge: Robert Stephenson and Co. (1902), 132 L. T. Jo. 135.

(c) Tweddle v. Atkinson (1861), 1 B. & S. 393.

(d) Dunderland Iron Ore Co., [1909] 1 Ch. 446.

(e) This would seem to be the result of the cases; see Empress Engineering Co. (1880), 16 C. D. 125, 129; Gandy v. Gandy (1885), 30 C. D. 57; Re Flavell (1884), 25 C. D. 89; but such provisions do not make the cestuis qui trustent creditors of the company; see Uruguay Central and Hygueritas Railway of Monte Video (1879), 11 C. D. 372.

(f) Olathe Silver Mining Co. (1884), 27 C. D. 278; and see Robinson v. Montgomeryshire Brewery, [1896] 2 Ch. 841.

The property which is to be subject to the charge is usually conveyed to the trustees—in the case of leaseholds a term by way of sub-demise being created—for the purpose of securing principal interest and other moneys (g) payable under the trust deed, and the deed provides that the trustees shall permit the company to carry on its business on the property until (in effect) the security becomes enforceable and is enforced, i.e. until the principal moneys shall become payable and the trustees shall enter and take possession or sell or appoint a receiver under the powers for such purposes conferred by the deed. If foreign property is comprised in the deed, and the lender has an equity according to English law, the Court will enforce the charge, even though the deed does not comply with the formalities of the lex loci (h).

The deed also specifies the events in which the principal moneys shall become payable, such events being the same as in the case of debentures (hh), and usually corresponding with those in the debentures (if the deed secures debentures, and not debenture stock).

Then follow a variety of powers which the company with the consent of the trustees or the trustees with the consent of the company may exercise over the property which is subject to a fixed charge, while the company is carrying on its business, e.g. powers of sale, exchange, partition, leasing, surrendering, or accepting surrenders of leases, compromising and releasing the property subject to the specific charge on receiving other property of at least equal value.

The deed will then enable the trustees to invest the moneys in the nature of capital moneys arising from such dealings, usually in trust securities or securities of a similar nature or with the consent of the company while it is carrying on its business in paying prior incumbrances, making improvements in the property subject to the fixed charge or in the acquisition of any property which the trustees may consider to be desirable to acquire. The power to acquire property will authorize a purchase from the company of property already subject to the floating charge (i).

Moneys arising under such powers and also moneys arising under over-riding powers as, e.g., under powers conferred by the Lands Clauses Act (k), or the powers of compensation conferred by the (g) This should include the trustee's remuneration; without these words the trustees would not have a charge for this: Re Accles (1903), 51 W. R. 57; and cp. Piccadilly Hotel Co., [1911] 2 Ch. 534. Where solicitors acting for trustees alone have prepared the trust deed and investigated the title to the property, they will have a lien on the trust deed: Dee Estates, [1911] 2 Ch. 85.

Licensing Act, 1904 (l), will, if the property affected is part of the specifically mortgaged property, themselves become part of such property. The Court has struggled in cases under the Licensing Act to say that the compensation money arose under powers in the trust deed so as to enable the trustees to invest it in securities authorized for such moneys, instead of investing in trust securities. Thus, Neville, J., held (m) that the compensation proceedings were "a controversy in relation to the mortgaged property," and Kekewich, J., held (n) that as the trustees had been compelled to sell, the money arose under a power of sale. It is thought desirable, however, in these cases to make the powers of investment above referred to applicable to all moneys which form part of the specifically mortgaged property. Such property when conveyed to the trustees will not now (o) have to pay a duty of 6*d*. per cent. on the entire debt as a substituted security, as was formerly the case (p).

We now come to the provisions for enforcing the security. It would seem desirable to enable the trustees to obtain a foreclosure decree, though this is not the usual remedy where there is a trust deed, and for this purpose there should be a power of sale, and not a trust for sale (q), and the proviso for redemption, which is usually at the end of the deed, should be so framed as to enable the company to redeem only before it has made default in payment of the principal moneys (r). The trustees should also be given power to take possession and to appoint a receiver, but frequently there is a proviso for the protection of the company that these powers shall not be exercised except in cases of urgency, or if the company has gone into winding-up, unless the trustees have given the company an opportunity of paying off the principal money, or of remedying the thing which has caused the debentures to become payable before their time. Where, as is frequently the case, trustees can enter on giving a certificate (o) The duty now is not to exceed 10*s*.: Revenue Act, 1903, s. 7; but the Act is not retrospective: Suffield v. Inland Revenue Commissioners, [1908] 1 K. B. 865.

(q) Jenkin v. Row (1851), 5 De G. & Sm. 107; Sampson v. Pattison (1842), 1 Ha. 533; Schweizer v. Mayhew (1862), 31 Beav. 37.

(r) Sampson v. Pattison (1842), 1 Ha. 533; and see also Re Owen, [1894] 3 Ch. 220; Balfe v. Lord (1842), 2 D. & W. 480. Of course such a proviso will not prevent redemption after that date, but, it will, it is thought, create an estate which on default would, before the Judicature Acts, have been absolute at law.

that in their opinion there is a case of urgency, the Court will not go behind such a certificate if given honestly and without recklessness (s).

The deed then confers on the trustees wide powers for carrying on the business of the company after they have exercised such powers of entry, etc., and also gives them power to remove receivers and appoint others in their place, and to fix the remuneration of a receiver, and to delegate to any receiver the powers conferred on the trustees or any of such powers; the other provisions as to receivers are the same as those contained in debentures, except that the receiver should pay over the surplus moneys, to the trustees. Then come the provisions as to applying the proceeds of a sale which are again much the same as in debentures, though it is advisable to reserve to the trustees a power not to distribute the funds immediately, where they have only a small sum in their hands. Then follows an investment clause, the range of investments being usually limited to trustee investments, but it is desirable to give the trustees power to leave money on deposit at a bank.

Then follow certain powers applicable whether the trustees have enforced their security or not, for facilitating sales, exchanges, partitions, leases, etc., and for protecting purchasers and others dealing with the trustees, when they exercise the powers conferred on them by the trust deed, and a clause giving power to convey, etc., by reference to the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and the Conveyancing Act, 1911.

Then follow various covenants by the company to keep proper books of account and to supply the trustees with copies of balance sheets, etc., to carry on their business properly, to allow the trustees to inspect all the property subject to the charge. To pay preferential debts, and other debts having priority to the charge, and not to create mortgages having priority to or ranking pari passu with the charge. To pay the trustees remuneration (t) and hotel and travelling expenses, and the expenses of carrying out the trusts, powers, and provisions of the trust, and to keep a proper register, to insure, to keep buildings, etc., in good repair, and not to pull the same down, without the consent of the trustees, and for further assurance.

Then follow certain powers conferred on the trustees. Power, in case of default by the company, to insure and to apply the insurance money, to act on information except telephonic (u), and to employ solicitors or other agents, further provisions for protecting trustees, a power to appoint trustees (given to the company with the sanction of an ordinary resolution of debenture stock holders, where a Stock Exchange quotation is desired). Power for a majority of the trustees to act, the proviso for reconveyance, a clause incorporating the provisions of the schedules as to the form of debenture stock certificates and as to meetings, and a clause dealing with notices.

(s) Joplin Brewery v. Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society, Times Newspaper, Nov. 17, 1909.

(t) Not infrequently this remuneration is made to continue notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver, and the fact that the trusts are being administered by the Court; if these words are inserted the trustees' remuneration if properly charged on the assets, will be a charge on the fund arising from a sale on a sale by the Court: Piccadilly Hotel Co., [1911] 2 Ch. 534. Without them it has been held that the remuneration will not be allowed after a receiver has been appointed: Debenture Corporation v. Uttoxeter Brewery, CHITTY, J., April 25, 1895; but it may be doubted whether this case is consistent either with the Piccadilly Hotel Co., [1911] 2 Ch. 534, or with South Western of Venezuela (Barquisimeto) Railway, [1902] 1 Ch. 701.

This brings us to the form of the debenture stock certificates. It must be borne in mind that this is the only document which gives the debenture stock holder anything in the nature of a direct contract with the company. Not infrequently the conditions of issue of the debenture stock are simply set out in the schedule to the trust deed, but it seems better to give the debenture stock holder the power of suing the company for his principal or interest, and so the conditions should be endorsed on the certificate and should be referred to on the face of the certificate (x).

For the purposes of a Stock Exchange quotation the requirements are the same as in the case of debentures (y), and the certificate after certifying that the holder is entitled to a certain amount of the stock, refers to the trust deed, and, as already stated, to the conditions of issue of the stock. It is under the company's seal, and has the usual notice as to stock not being transferred unless the certificate is produced.

With regard to the conditions to be endorsed on the certificate, they should provide for the holders of the debenture stock ranking pari passu, for the conditions of repayment and redemption and for payment of interest, for a register of debentures being kept, for certificates, for transfers (z), and for the transferees taking free from equities. The remarks on these matters which have been made with reference to debentures, may be referred to here. The provisions as to transfers usually contain a clause designed to prevent the stock becoming too much subdivided.

Turning to what is usually the third schedule to the trust deed,

(y) See supra, p. 464.

(z) It is not thought necessary here to repeat what has already been said with reference to forged and fraudulent transfers of shares, and as to certificates obtained by fraud or forgery. These remarks apply in the case of debenture stock or debentures no less than they do in the case of shares (see supra, pp. 280 et seq., and pp. 294 et seq.

namely, the provisions relating to meetings and the powers conferred on majorities. There is a power to convene meetings usually given to the trustees and the company, also a power for a certain number or a specified proportion of the holders to requisition a meeting. There is a provision for the voting rights of the holders, holders to whom debentures have been issued as collateral security usually ranking as if the face value of their debentures were owing to them (a). The schedule provides what number of debenture stock holders are to constitute a quorum, usually the holders of a certain specified amount of stock, e.g. half of it, or even three-quarters of it (b). It also provides for the chairman and other incidental matters which relate to the actual holding of the meeting.

Then come the powers (c) conferred on the debenture stock holders by extraordinary resolution. These usually are: (1) power to remove a trustee; (2) power without any further sanction to bind the debenture stock holders by any compromise or arrangement with the company which the Court could sanction under section 120 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, if it had been agreed to at a duly summoned meeting by the statutory majority (cc). The decisions under the Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870 (which now is replaced by section 120 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908), which are referred to in discussing that section (d), show that such a power enables the persons to whom it is given to do pretty well anything; but the power is usually followed by one which is almost if not quite, equally wide, namely: (3) power to agree to any variation in the provisions of the trust deed, or in the security thereby created, and to release or modify any of the rights of the debenture stock holders, and to discharge or exonerate the trustees from all liability in respect of any breach of trust. This power is somewhat wider that the one used in Mercantile Investment and General Trust Co. v. International Company of Mexico (e), and it would certainly authorize the release of a guarantee in exchange for an increase in the debenture interest (f), or a meeting to allow the company to convert redeemable into irredeemable debenture stock (ff), to create a loan ranking in priority to the debenture stock (g), to give other debenture stock holders the benefit of the deed pari passu with the original holders (h), or to give the company time at all events in cases where the rights of the debenture stock holders inter se are not altered (i), such powers usually arise where there is any difficulty in obtaining payment in full of principal money and interest (k). Such powers continue even after the equity or redemption has been assigned, and the original debtor has disappeared (l). The fact that a debenture-holder has succeeded in an action for interest against the original debtor because the scheme was held to be bad, will not estop the assignee of such debtor even where he has found the money for defending the action, from denying the right of the debenture-holder to the property comprised in the security, and showing the scheme to be valid (m). In an action by a debenture stock holder to impeach the exercise of such a power, the other debenture stock holders must be parties (mm).

(c) A very sweeping power expressed in general words was held in Hay v. Swedish and Norwegian Railway (1889), 5 T. L. R. 460, not to enable a meeting to sanction anything contradictory to the deed; it is thought that the powers here given which have been tested by decisions, go further, though it would be impossible to exceed the generality of the terms in the case cited.

(cc) Under such a power redeemable debenture stock can be converted into irredeemable debenture stock: Northern Assurance v. Farnham Breweries (1912), 56 Sol. J. 360.

(d) See infra, pp. 727 and 728, for schemes sanctioned under this section, and see as to such a power in a deed Labuan and Borneo Co. (1902), 18 T. L. R. 216, where a sale for shares was held to be authorized.

STAMP DUTIES.

(a) Loan Capital.—Where any company formed or established in the United Kingdom proposes to issue any loan capital, it must, before the issue thereof, deliver to the Inland Revenue Commissioners a statement of the amount proposed to be secured by the issue. Every such statement is charged with an ad valorem stamp duty of 2*s*. 6*d*. for every £100 and fraction of £100 over any multiple of £100 proposed to be secured by the issue, but the duty is not charged to the extent to which it is shown to the satisfaction of the Inland Revenue Commissioners that the Stamp Duty payable in respect of a mortgage or marketable security has been paid on any trust deed or other document securing the loan proposed to be issued. A company neglecting to deliver a statement or failing to pay the duty will be liable to pay in addition a sum equal to 10 per cent. upon the amount of the duty for every month during which the neglect or default continues. For the purposes of the section "loan capital" includes debenture stock or funded debt by whatever name known, or any capital raised by any company formed or established in the United Kingdom which is borrowed or has the character of borrowed money, whether it is in the form of stock or in any other form, but does not include any overdraft at the bank or other loan raised for a merely temporary purpose for a period not exceeding twelve months (n). Under the head of "mortgage bond and debenture" (except a marketable security otherwise specially charged with duty) the following duties are payable:—

1. Being the only or principal or primary security for the payment or repayment of money (q):—

A marketable security (r) is a security of such a description as to be capable of being sold in any stock market in the United Kingdom (s). In other words, a marketable security must be capable according to the use and practice of stock markets of being there sold and bought (t), they must be what are commonly called (o) Alpe on Stamp Duties, 12th Ed., p. 228, and Official Circular July 6, 1899, therein referred to.

(p) Stamp Act, 1891, Schedule, tit. Marketable Security. In the case of bearer debentures this is doubled by s. 76 of the Finance (1909–1910) Act, 1910.

(r) The expression "marketable security" includes "a marketable security made or issued by or on behalf of any company or body of persons corporate or incorporate formed or established in the United Kingdom": Stamp Act, 1891, s. 82; see this section and ss. 4 and 6 of the Finance Act, 1899, as to the foreign marketable securities included.

Stock Exchange securities: a marketable security need not necessarily give any charge or any tangible security for it, includes mere personal securities such as promissory notes (u). In a word, practically all debentures and debenture stock certificates come within the expression.

Where debentures, etc., can only be redeemed on payment of a premium, the moneys lent plus the amount of the premium will be the moneys thereby secured (x); but the premium is not taken into account in ascertaining the stamp, where the premium is only payable at the option of the mortgagors, e.g. as the price for allowing them to redeem on a certain date (y); but where the mortgagor is bound to repair and if he makes default the mortgagees are entitled to do the repairs, and the moneys so spent by them are charged on the property by virtue of the provisions of the mortgage deed stamp duties are not payable in respect of such moneys (z). Registered debentures, then, usually pay a duty of 2*s.* 6*d.* per cent. If they are secured by a trust deed (a) that deed will, if the debentures thereby secured are fully stamped, only require a 10*s.* stamp. In the case of registered debenture stock, the deed is stamped with an ad valorem mortgage stamp, and not the stock certificates; but where the debenture stock is payable to bearer the deed will only require a 10*s.* stamp.

2. Mortgages other than marketable securities, which confer a collateral or auxiliary or additional or substituted security other than an equitable mortgage or are given by way of further assurance for such purpose, where the principal or primary security is duly stamped, pay the following duties for every £100, and also for any fractional part of £100 of the amount secured, 6*d.* (b), but so that in the case of any mortgage created after the 31st August, 1903 (c), the whole amount of such duty shall not exceed 10*s.* (d).

The following duties are payable on the transfer assignment disposition or assignation of a marketable security of any description:

(d) Revenue Act, 1903, s. 7. The section is not retrospective: Suffield v. Inland Revenue, [1908] 1 K. B. 865.

(1) On a sale the ordinary duty on a conveyance on sale, viz.: 5*s*. for each £50 or fractional part of £50, or, where the sale is for less than £300, the smaller sums mentioned under the title of Conveyance on Sale in the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891 (e).

(2) In the case of a mortgage the same duty as in the case of a mortgage by deed, viz.: 2*s*. 6*d*. for every £100 or fractional part of £100 of the amount secured, or, when the mortgage is to secure less than £100, the smaller sums mentioned in the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, under the title of Mortgage Bond, etc. In the case of an equitable mortgage under hand only 1*s*. for every £100 or fractional part of £100 of the amount secured.

(3) In other cases, 10*s*. (f).

With regard to marketable securities (except colonial Government securities) being securities transferable by delivery and bearing date or signed or offered for subscription after 6th August, 1885, they pay for every £10 and also for any fractional part of £10 of the money thereby secured 2*s*. (g), but if such securities are to be paid off within three years after the date of payment of duty, and the date of repayment is conspicuously stated on the face of the security the duty will be 3*d*. for every £10 if the security is to be paid off within one year, and 6*d*. for every £10 if the security is to be paid off within three years. Full duty will, however, be payable where the security is negotiated in the United Kingdom after the date stated on the face of the security as the date for repayment, allowance being made for duty already paid (gg).

If any marketable security of any description is given in substitution (h) for a like security duly stamped in conformity with the law in force at the time when it became subject to duty, it will pay for every £20 and also for any fractional part of £20 of the money thereby secured (i) 1*s*. It is thought that the Official Circular of March, 1890, which points out that registered securities and bearer securities are not like securities is correct (k). An Official Circular of April, 1910 (l), states that where a bearer security is issued in exchange for a registered security, the full duty of 2*s*. per £10 is payable (l).

Stock certificates to bearer are liable to a duty of an amount equal to three times the amount of the ad valorem stamp duty which would be chargeable on a deed transferring the share or shares or stock specified in the certificate if the consideration for the transfer were the nominal value of such stock (m).

(e) This would appear not to be affected by the Finance (1909–1910) Act, 1910. See as to the duties on transfers supra, pp. 291 and 166.

(g) Ibid., as varied by s. 76 of the Finance (1909–1910) Act, 1910.

(gg) Finance Act, 1911, s. 13. A fine of £20 will be incurred by persons who, after the date named for repayment, assign transfer or negotiate any such securities which do not bear the full stamp, or who are concerned as brokers or agents in so doing.

(h) Mount Lyell v. Inland Revenue, [1904] 1 K. B. 757, [1905] 1 K. B. 161, "a like security" it would seem must be one given by the same debtor; see also this case as to what is "a like security."

(i) Stamp Act, 1891, Schedule, tit. Marketable Security, as varied by s. 76 of the Finance (1909–1910) Act, 1910. Section 13 of the Finance Act, 1911, makes these provisions inapplicable to securities paying the reduced rates prescribed by that section.

(l) Alpe on Stamp Duties, 12th Ed., p. 168.

(m) Stamp Act, 1891, Schedule,

On reconveyance, release, etc., of property comprised in a security a duty of 6*d.* for every £100 and fractional part of £100 is payable. A mere acknowledgment that money secured by a floating charge has been paid off is not within this provision (n).

With regard to coupons for interest on marketable securities, whether issued with the security or subsequently in a sheet, these are not chargeable with any duty (o).

Scrip certificates are subject to a duty of 1*d.* by the Stamp Act, 1891, and it is thought that sections 5 and 6 of the Finance Act, 1899 do not alter this (see Official Circular, September, 1899).

Letters of allotment and letters of renunciation were under the Stamp Act, 1891, subjected to a duty of 1*d.*; but section 9 of the Finance Act, 1899, provides that 6*d.* is to be substituted for 1*d.* as the stamp duty chargeable under the Stamp Act, 1891, on a letter of allotment and letter of renunciation or other document having the effect of a letter of allotment, when the nominal amount which is allotted or to which the letter of renunciation relates is not less than £5. Separate duties are chargeable under this section in respect of letters of allotment and of renunciation, though contained in the same document, and the stamp on a letter of renunciation may be denoted by an adhesive stamp, which must be cancelled by the person by whom the letter of renunciation is executed. Receipts attached to scrip certificates or letters of allotment are not liable to any duty (p).

The memorandum of association with the names addresses and descriptions of the signatories and the number of shares subscribed for by them respectively will be found within the fold (z).

Applications for debenture stock of this issue should be made upon the form accompanying this prospectus and sent to the Company's bankers with the amount payable on application.

If no allotment be made the deposit will be returned in full or if only a partial allotment the balance of the deposit will be applied in reduction of the amount payable on allotment and the excess (if any) returned.

In the case of default in payment of the amount payable on allotment or of any subsequent instalment the Company may at their option either cancel the allotment and forfeit the sums already paid or charge interest at the rate of 10 per cent. per annum on the amount in arrear from the date of default till payment.

Application will in due course be made to the committee of the Stock Exchange for a special settlement and official quotation (a),

Scrip certificates will be issued after the payment of the amount due on allotment—and such certificates will when the amount of the debenture stock comprised therein has been paid in full be exchangeable for Debenture Stock Certificates.

Copies of the memorandum and articles and the trust deed and the contracts and certificates above referred may be inspected at the Offices of the Company's Solicitors between the hours of 12 and 4 on any day before the subscription list is closed.

Gentlemen,

Having paid to the Company's bankers The   Bank,

(y) This is unnecessary where the prospectus is issued more than a year after the company is entitled to commence business.

(z) This is unnecessary in a newspaper advertisement, or if the prospectus be published more than a year after the company is entitled to commence business; it will not be required for the purpose of a Stock Exchange quotation except where the Act requires it.

(a) As to the requirements for an official quotation (see supra, p. 218), the prospectus will have to be publicly advertised, though not necessarily in a newspaper, it being sufficient if a reasonable number of copies are circulated. Two-thirds of the issue will have to be applied for and unconditionally allotted to the public.

Limited the sum of £ being a deposit of 25 per cent. on the debenture stock applied for by me/us I/we request you to allot me/us £ of the above debenture stock on the terms of the prospectus issued by you dated 19 and I/we agree to pay the amount payable on allotment and the remaining instalment on any allotment that may be made in respect of this application as provided by the said prospectus.

THE CONDITIONS WITHIN REFERRED TO.

1. This debenture is one of an issue of debentures each for securing a sum of £ with interest thereon at the rate of per cent. per annum. All the said debentures are in the same form and rank pari passu in point of charge. Although the charge created by the said debentures is a floating charge the Company shall not create any mortgage or charge ranking pari passu with or in priority to the charge hereby created.

2. The Company shall keep at its registered office a register (hereinafter called the register) of the holders of debentures of this issue and shall enter therein the names addresses and descriptions of such holders and the debentures held by them respectively.

3. The Company shall not be bound to enter any notice of any trust express implied or constructive in the register and shall not be bound to recognize any one as having any title to this debenture except the registered holder thereof ; but so that the legal personal representatives of a deceased sole registered holder and any person becoming entitled to this debenture by reason of the bankruptcy of any registered holder shall upon producing such evidence as the directors may from time to time require have the same rights and be subject to the same provisions as are herein conferred on and declared concerning a registered holder of this debenture.

4. Every transfer of this debenture shall be in writing under the hand of the transferor. [The Company may decline to register any transfer if the transferor or any person through whom he claims otherwise than by transfer is indebted to the Company, but save as aforesaid] (c) any transfer left at the office of the Company together with a fee of 2*s*. 6*d*. and this debenture and such other evidence as the directors may reasonably require to show the right of the transferor to transfer shall be registered. On registration of any such transfer a note of the registration shall be endorsed on the debenture.

5. When this debenture is registered in the name of joint holders the survivors or survivor of them shall be deemed to be the registered holder thereof and any sole survivor shall be deemed to be a sole registered holder, and any notice which the Company may give and any cheque or warrant

(c) The words in square brackets will be omitted if an official quotation on the Stock Exchange is required, except if the debentures are issued as partly paid, and the power to decline to register transfers is limited to partly paid debentures.

for interest which it may send to the registered holder of this debenture under the provisions hereinafter contained may be sent to any one of such joint holders at his registered address or to such other person $\frac{\text{and}}{\text{or}}$ address as he may direct.

6. All principal moneys and interest hereby secured shall subject to the provisions of the next condition be paid to the registered holder of this debenture without regard to any equities existing between the Company and any prior holder of this debenture.
